SHAKESPEAREAN FESTIVAL ASS'N RINGS DOWN CURTAIN ON SEASON

The curtains closed for the last time and behind it the members of the cast of "The Merchant of Venice," shook hands, embraced and received the congratulations of their friends and relatives. The Seventh Annual Shakespearean festival (the first one since the war) had rung down the curtain on a three-week season which according to history-loving Robert Dodge, president of the Festival Association, had surpassed in gate receipts and public acceptance the wildest hopes of the most optimistic member.

The four plays, "Love's Labour's Lost," "Hamlet," "Merchant of Venice," and "Macbeth," were each presented four times. Among the people in the audience at the performances were residents of practically every state in the Union and also Canadian visitors. Letters and telephone calls and personal messages of congratulation and praise have poured into the offices of the executive secretary William Healy, ever since the performances began.

Behind the scenes working to make the presentations professional has been an array of talent including Otto Wilda, art instructor at Southern Oregon college who worked night after night building sets and property; Les Grant, Ashland Junior high school coach, who has helped Wilda; Mrs. Adaline Weber, prompter, who put in 285 hours of rehearsal time before the productions ever began; Marshall Woodell, secretary of the organization who has been responsible for the tickets, and the 1001 business matters which occur time after time; Elliott MacCracken, who's been aiding with overall supervision; Edmund Dews who aided in the ticket sales, Don McWhirter, Harold Newton, and worked out the seating; Dyer Huston, who handled the programs and publicity; and Bill Hernon, a supporting actor from Canada, who, when he wasn't acting was busy back stage with everything from sound effects to lighting.

Angus Bowmer, director of the series, and Frank Lambrett-

Smith, Canadian actor, who played and directed Hamlet have already made plans for next year's Festival. Bowmer is to take the cast of "Love's Labour's Lost" to Canada next year and in return Lambrett-Smith will bring the Canadian Lambrett-Smith players to Ashland to play in "Richard III." Other plays selected for next year's festival include "Taming of the Shrew," and "Twelfth Night."
