Smallest Phototube
The smallest phototube, no larger than a .22 caliber long rifle cartridge, is expected to expand vastly the electric eye or robot applications in industry.

Riboflavin in Dry Milk
When milk is concentrated by drying, riboflavin per pound of product is increased to the point where only two or three foods outrank it.

Fire Killed More
Fire killed more people in Boston's Coconut Grove night club disaster than were lost by American troops invading North Africa.

Time Is Being Wasted
One-fourth of the working time of farmers is spent in producing food which is thrown away before reaching the consumer.

Britain's Bid for Power
Electric power plants have received from the British government first call on the nation's annual steel supply of 13 million tons.

Double-Barreled Beets
Beets are a double-barreled vegetable. When young and tender, the tops are rich sources of iron and vitamins while the roots contain minerals and vitamin B-1 and G. They are also a relish. As pickles, they add zest to any meal. Many good cooks pickle hard-boiled eggs with their beets.

Siberian Forage Crop
Seeding of crested wheatgrass on one million acres of abandoned cropland in Montana has increased the income of livestock operators about two million dollars. Siberian plains resulted from cooperative research by the Montana station and the department of agriculture.

Depth of Body of Water
A pond of water appears shallower to human eyes than it actually is because the water bends or refracts light. The apparent distance of the bottom is reduced by the light bending.

Pigeon Racing Sport
The sport of pigeon racing is most popular in Belgium, where nearly every village has its "Societe Columbophile" or pigeon club. Pigeons belong to the family, Columbidae.

How Many Trees?
No one knows, because new ones are being discovered in remote tropical regions constantly, just how many different species of trees there are in the world. However, over 20,000, with a definite economic value, have been reported.

Oil Resistant Compound
For use on any electrical circuit coming in contact with oil, an oil-resistant compound made of neoprene rubber with special synthetics has been developed. It is distributed in the form of tape.
