Defense

Some commentators on military affairs seem to think that new weapons and new techniques have made almost all of the old ones obsolete—and that we should completely junk the traditional in favor of the experimental. As an example, naval surface ships are cited as next-to-useless relics of the past.

Secretary of the Navy John L. Sullivan recently answered that by reminding the country of four past developments which, at one time, were supposed to drive surface vessels from the seas. The first was explosive shells of great calibre—but improved armor plate proved the answer to that. Then the perfection of the torpedo was heralded as the death knell of ships—until compartmentation and other forms of anti-torpedo protection solved the problem. The improved submarine led to a wide belief that shipping had become too risky and too expensive to attempt—a claim which was subsequently disproved by such developments as the depth bomb and other defense measures. Finally, the aircraft zealots said that the high development of the military plane meant that sea power ceased to exist. And that claim, as everyone knows, was completely disproved by the experience of World War II in which surface ships—both transport and combat—played one of the decisive roles.

No intelligent man minimizes the potential importance of new weapons. But, at the same time, no one can say that further invention will not at least partially neutralize their menace. A first-class fighting-force, even as it works aggressively to develop the new, must maintain its efficiency and strength in old weapons and ideas whose decisiveness has been proved time and time again. It must, in short, be ready for combat of the traditional as well as a revolutionary character.

Let this thought, then, rest with the sponsors of the recent lectures of Brigadier General Holdridge in this area. The general, in opposing Universal Military Training, pointed out that our present weapons were obsolete and that it would be futile to train men on the assumption that they would be a defensive force. "There is no defense," said the general.

There always has been a defense and there always will be a need for a defense as long as other nations of the world follow the doctrines of Carl Marx rather than those of Jesus of Nazareth.

To Clear The Record

The Latter Day Saints city directory, which is being printed in Suisan, California, will soon be released in this community states Alvin Bounds, who was in charge in the directory project.

In an article in the Daily Tidings, Bounds is quoted as saying that the directory is being printed in the California city as there was no printing shop in Ashland which would accept the work.

This is an error as both commercial printing establishments in Ashland made tentative bids on the job. The Bowdoin Printing company turned the job down after determining that it would tie up the shop for too long a period of time, during the Christmas rush, and also after study, Joseph Bowdoin considered that the organization's purpose in compiling and distributing the directory was in direct opposition to Christian beliefs which he personally subscribed to.

The News Review bid on the job and heard no more about it. The estimate is on file in this office and does not vary from Franklin list prices, charged by all printing establishments in Jackson county.

Had the order for the directory been placed in an Ashland printing plant it would have been produced in Ashland.

Lucky Citizens

Ashland residents should realize the fact that they are a bit more happily situated than are most of the rest of the people in the state of Oregon. We aren't speaking of the salubrious climate, nor the "fine" water, nor the other natural advantages which are given to those who reside in this area but we are speaking of the fact that within the past week the people of the community have had occasion to listen to two men, both relatively important in their field, speak on matters of interest to every citizen of the United States of America.

Dr. Frank Monk, who spoke Monday at the auditorium, pointed out the need for an American imperialistic policy. Brigadier General Holdridge, who spoke Friday, pointed out some of the dangers of such a policy. Both men were brought to Ashland, largely because of the fact that this is a college town. We are to be envied to be so situated.

John Hall, governor of the State of Oregon, stated this week that "among our greatest tragedies are the more than 80,000 persons adults as well as children, who have been broken by infantile paralysis during the past five years. The battle against this disease will not be won until some preventative has been found and perfected for this great crippler. Meanwhile, all possible medical help must be provided for its victims.

"The day when infantile paralysis will be gone," Hall continued, "can be brought much closer by contributions to this fight; contributions of money, medical skill and research. The help we can give now through the March of Dimes will assist in the actual caring for the thousands who suffer having polio. Research made possible from these funds will some day find the cause and cure."

The governor knows well what polio can do to a community. Ontario, and Vale are among the Oregon communities where infantile paralysis was epidemic this past year. Ashland, or some other Jackson county community, might be next on the list.

Money contributed to the March of Dimes will help in the fight against polio, and we sincerely hope that that money will never have to be used here at home.

Stricken by polio while he was in Paris, France, to enroll at the Sorbonne, George Courtright of Klamath Agency, Oregon, finds additional inspiration for his recovery from Terry Tullios, the 1948 March of Dimes poster boy. The 33 year old Oregonian is shown in this picture with Mrs. Florence R. Keith, Executive Secretary of the Polio Unit at New York's Knickerbocker Hospital where he is receiving care and treatment at the expense of the Klamath County Chapter.

The March of Dimes drive, which is being conducted this year in Ashland by Don MacWhirter and Dyer Huston is drawing to a close. Have YOU given?

Climaxing a busy schedule of March of Dimes participation, KWIN will be on hand to broadcast the festivities from the Medford Elks temple Saturday night. Starting at 10 p.m. KWIN will broadcast by direct wire from Medford, giving a full description of the president's ball.

This is just one of many shows which KWIN has broadcast dedicated to the 1948 campaign. There have been numerous transcribed shows aired during recent weeks, featuring some of the top talent of radio and screen. Besides these, there have been lots of short plugs worked into the different platter shows, and each featuring a few words from various top artists.

Speaking of platter shows, the Music Box, 1:15 to 3:30 daily, now has a new emcee, E. C. Vanderwalker is doing the spinning, replacing Bob Allen who has returned to his native California. Ralph Beckett, who just recently joined the staff, has replaced Allen on the 5 and 9 p.m. newcasts.

Charlie Fields is again back on the job after missing only a day as a result of a motorcycle spill. Charlie banged up both himself and the cycle, but the records for the Kiddie Corner that he was carrying, came through intact. Incidentally, many of the shows heard on the Kiddie Corner, Monday, Wednesday, Friday at 5:15, are shows that have been requested by listeners. If you have any particular favorites, drop a line to the station, and there's a good chance you'll hear them.

"The Tattler" the school paper came out at the first of last week. Among the articles that received the most comment was the one on long skirts. Several letters have been received stating their opinions on the "new look."
Glamour took the highlight at the Junior High Thursday, as the ninth grade girls came to school all dressed up, hose, highheels, and all. Along towards the end of the day, however, several of them were complaining of tired feet.
On Friday a pep assembly was held in the gym honoring the game of that night. Several songs and yells were led and a special one was when three students

Another busy week end of basketball games coming up. On both Friday and Saturday nights, KWIN will carry the Ashland-Klamath games, being played in Ashland junior high gym. Broadcast time each evening is 7:45. Incidentally, both games will be fed to KFLW in Klamath Falls.
On the following week, KWIN will also carry the SOC-San Francisco games being played on Monday and Tuesday evenings. On Friday and Saturday of the same week, KWIN will broadcast two more games, this time the Cal Aggies-SOC game Friday night, and the Medford-Ashland game Saturday night.

came on to the floor. On a second look it was realized that they were Mr. Grant, Mr. Cortell and Mr. Vestal. They were dressed in the school colors and proceeded to do one of the school yells.
That night, the game between Ashland and Roseburg came off with the eighth grade winning and the ninth grade game going to Roseburg.

O'NEIL ELECTED PREXY
Frank O'Neil, Ashland high school athletic director, was named president of the Southern division of the Oregon Association for Health, Physical Education, and Recreation, at a meeting held in Medford Saturday.

Dr. Elmo Stevenson, president of Southern Oregon College, gave the principal address to the group which included 30 delegates from as many Southern Oregon schools.
