Thales Rubbed Amber
Thales, Greek physical philosopher of Miletus, discovered in 600 B. C. that if amber is rubbed with a cloth it has the power to attract light bodies such as feathers, leaves, straw and small bits of wood. This is the origin of static electricity, so-called because the particles of electricity "created" on the surface of the amber are static. Later Dr. William Gilbert coined the word "electricity" from the Greek word for amber, "elektron." It was not until 1905 that static electricity was put to any practical use in the process of "smoke removal and dust prevention."

Aluminum in the Garden
If a gardening enthusiast could obtain in its pure state all of the aluminum that he unearths in his daily diggings, he'd have enough of the metal to completely equip the home with cooking utensils and probably with an all-aluminum house. For, potentially, every pail of garden dirt contains a pound of the lightweight metal. But the gardener would find if he dug himself a couple of tons of garden dirt that, although theoretically he might have approximately 500 pounds of aluminum, it would cost him a fortune to separate it from the earth.

Synthetic Rubber Alloy
Alloyed with certain plastics, synthetic rubber will be used in great quantities in the future. They form a tough, resilient floor tile which is unaffected by oils and grease.

Farm Market
There is a total farm market for manufactured products of 25 billion dollars according to an estimate of Cornell university. The increase in the market over previous estimates results from a rise of 40 per cent in farm production over prewar levels and more money being received for agricultural products.

Heavy Eaters
