Driving Hazards Listed By State

There's a reason why driving at night or on weekends may make you nervous, the state traffic safety division avers.
Heavy traffic or darkness means danger with a capital "D."

Saturday and Sunday claim almost as many traffic victims as the rest of the week. Night accidents for half of all deaths, although only a quarter of all accidents occur at night.

The division said Sunday was the most dangerous traffic day in 1949 with 67 fatal mishaps, closely followed by Saturday with 60. Tuesday was safest with 25.

Overdriving headlights is the usual error in night driving, the division warned. Overdriving headlights means being unable to stop in the distance clearly illuminated ahead, leaving the driver at the mercy of unexpected obstacles or events.

Wet or slippery pavements come in for only a small share of the blame. Nearly four-fifths of Oregon's fatal accidents occur on dry road surfaces.
