SOUND, PICTURES Both Sent Simultaneously. CHICAGO.—A new transmission system by which both television and pictures can be sent simultaneously over a common radio link was described here.

The system was described as the first commercially available means of sending both sound and video over a common TV radio link, and one which cuts out noise and fading and gives better tone to the sound. It is being tested for commercial TV use.

Under present methods, picture and sound are sent separately—the picture by coaxial cable or a radio link, the sound on high-quality telephone wire.

The new system may be used with FM radio links or with television cable circuits, eliminating the need for the telephone lines.

The report was made by engineers of the Federal Tele-Communications Laboratories, Inc., & unit of International Telephone & Telegraph corporation. The paper was prepared for delivery to an engineering conference of the National Association of Broadcasters.

Shelter for Pigs. In winter when pigs are not hogging off corn, they should be sleeping. If forced to sleep in a cold rain, a week's feeding may easily be lost. Whatever type of shelter is used, it should have a roof that will turn a heavy rain and at least two walls tight enough to be wind and rain proof. The shelter should be built so that seepage or run off water will not puddle in the beds.
