Local Police Meet Census Problems

Comparisons are far from odious to those in Ashland who are still blinking their eyes over the recent population statistics. The official figure of 7702 does not take into account the year round college population nor the hundreds of persons taking some form of health treatments in the city. The actual residents of Ashland doubtless number closer to 8200. All of which puts this city in the same classification as rants Pass with 7980 and Roseburg with 8205.

In the ten year period since the last census, Oregon has led the nation in percentage gain, with the southwestern area going far into the lead. Increased population has brought increased problems in traffic and in crime control but it has likewise increased the revenues. All of which make for an interesting survey.

The Ashland police department employs eight as compared to sixteen by Grants Pass and fifteen by Roseburg. Ashland has one patrol car and one motorcycle. Grants Pass and Roseburg have two patrol cars and two motorcycles each. To carry the comparisons further, the flow of traffic through Ashland on highways 66 and 99 make Ashland a focal point for tourists and transients with the problems which are entailed. Being the southern gateway to Oregon puts an added strain on the city's police force as well.

In a recent report by the local police department, Chief Vern Smith gave interesting figures on the recovery of stolen property in the past year totaling $16,000. If this amount were considered together with the estimated increased revenue from taxation and from liquor control income, the Ashland police protection would be amazingly low on a per capita basis.

With summer tourists arriving and with the growing holiday crowds which come to the park and plunges, the 24 hour protection needed for Ashland is of prime importance. It is no longer a question of dollars and cents cost but a proven fact that Ashland is getting the lowest "police insurance" rates of any city of comparable size in Oregon.

Sixty Visiting Planes at Air Show Here Sunday

The weatherman gave the nod to the Ashland Air Show last Sunday by turning on the heat with cloudless skies for their annual trek into the wide blue yonder. From crack of dawn till late afternoon, planes of every size and description winged their way into the valley from points as far distant as Portland and Redding.

Air caravans are becoming increasingly popular throughout the country as more and more individual planes go into operation. It is no longer an unusual experience for the family to take off for a shopping trip by plane. The wide open spaces of the west in particular have been made suburban areas.

The Ashland hosts for the air meet welcomed their incoming guests with badges which entitled them to a ham and egg breakfast at the Elks club. Tours of the local points of interest had been arranged by the committee in charge of entertainment while the new golf course, the Twin Plunges and Lithia park were all well patronized during the day.

More than 60 visiting planes flew in attracting a crowd estimated at approximately 3000 for the afternoon air show which featured such flyers as Fred Wilcox of Medford, Gene Labelle and Dan Healy stunt flyers of Ashland, members of the Civil Air Patrol under the leadership of Lt. Don Stewart, and Elmer Ayres, aviation instructor who told "how not to fly." Among other guests were the mayor of Astoria, the district attorney of Multnomah county and members of the state aeronautics board.

150 free rides were given by the visiting pilots and the soft drinks concession was in charge of the Ashland Jaycees. In the absence of Mayor Phil Stansbury, Fred Homes served as official city host. The planes for the show were under the direction of Steve Zarka, Abe Neslin, Sumner Parker, Bert Wright, Earl Lininger, Eugene Ritzinger and Dan Healy.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Gerbich and son who have been visiting at the home of Mrs. Gerbich's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Harrison of 190 Vista street, returned to their home in San Francisco on Wednesday.

ANNUAL FIRE GUARD TRAINING COMPLETED

Approximately 60 trainees completed the annual fire guard training school conducted by the Rogue River National Forest on the Butte Falls ranger district, according to L. G. Jolley, forest supervisor.

The trainees, representing all ranger districts in the forest, including Applegate, Ashland, Butte Falls, Klamath, and Union Creek, received the three day training June 13, 14, and 15. Harold A. Thomas, district ranger of the Ashland district, served as one of the instructors at the school. Over-all planning and general supervision of the school was under Verus W. Dahlin, fire control staff officer of the Rogue River National Forest.

The men were given instruction on fire location and fire fighting methods. Jolley said that the annual training period is extremely important since only about 60 additional men are available during the fire season to help protect a forest area consisting of approximately 1 million acres.
