The first in a series of nerve impulses may act as a motorcycle escort, clearing the way for those that follow and enabling them to go faster in their hasty travels over the networks of the nervous system.

This is indicated in the results of a study of fundamental mechanisms of the nervous system by Dr. Theodore H. Bullock and Lillian R. Berkowitz of the University of California.

The study shows that in many cases when a nerve receives an impulse, subsequent impulses travel at a faster rate through the nerve fibers for a short time. This acceleration continues until fatigue slows down conduction.

An investigation was made at the rate at which impulses are conducted through the single nerve fibers of sea worms, earthworms, and whole nerves of frogs. The rate of conduction was actually increased after a "conditioning" impulse in all these cases up to 20 per cent.

Until these results were observed, it had been thought that an impulse slows down subsequent impulses until recovery to a normal rate is complete.

These observations may greatly simplify the search for the basic mechanism of nervous function.

The study was made under a U.S. public health grant.

Honey Substitute for Bees. If feeding is necessary, the best substitute for honey, as a food for bees, is a heavy syrup made of white granulated sugar and water. For winter stores, the syrup should be made by dissolving two parts of sugar in one part of water. In feeding the colonies in cold weather, increase the ratio of sugar to two and one-half parts of water, adding one teaspoonful of tartaric acid to every 20 pounds of sugar to keep the syrup from granulating. In making this heavy syrup, use boiling water to dissolve the sugar, and add the tartaric acid to the boiling syrup. Stir constantly until all sugar is dissolved. Sugar syrup that has fermented, especially in tin or iron containers, should not be fed to bees, for it is often poisonous to them.

Meditations. Christians should not only be the salt of the earth but also the sugar.

Many people have a good sense of humor.

To lose a bit of money is nothing, but to lose hope—to lose nerve to lose ambition—that is what makes men cripples.—Herbert N. Casson.

A little goodness is better than a lot of bigness.

Handles Carefully Finished. Ever notice the finish on the handle of your paint brush, screw driver, penholder, paring knife, saw, hoe, rake, or umbrella? It had to be carefully formulated so that it would be hard, glossy, smooth, resistant to moisture, perspiration and abrasion. It must not soften or become sticky when it's in use. Lacquers and hard-drying varnishes fill all these specifications to a high degree and are frequently used for such purposes.
