PERSONAL

BALLOONS, 50 for $1.00 postpaid. Various shapes, colors. Fun for all. Albert Lewin, 1705 Dahl Road, Dept. C, Brooklyn 23, New York.

Enemies of Lemming The most dangerous natural enemies of the lemming are the snowy owl, the arctic fox and ermine, who depend almost exclusively on the lemming as their winter fare. The snowy owl—white except for sharp, black bars across the body—is a born and trained hunter, equipped with ice-pick sharp claws for seizing a victim. Though the owl travels south during a season of lemming migration, he rarely breeds outside his home in the arctic circle. The ermine, thin and sinuous, is more successful than the fox in hunting down the lemming roads—built in the winter under a heavy blanket of snow—while the fox must smell and search and dig for his food.

Bandaging Dog's Tail A long-time problem of veterinarians—how to keep bandages in place on monkeys' and dogs' tails—may be solved in the future by use of stainless steel tubes. English veterinarians are experimenting with stainless steel tubes as surgical dressings for injured tails. Dogs and monkeys are noted for tampering with bandages, often biting or pulling off dressings meant to protect wounds. Steel tubes promote healing by protecting the wounded tail from further injuries resulting from biting or scratching, allow free ventilation of the wound and make it easy for veterinarians to observe how healing is progressing.
