Field Etiquette

The problem of securing a good place to hunt is one which confronts many novice hunters each season. Experienced hunters, too, have difficulty in this respect when they move into unfamiliar territories.

"For the individual who practices all the simple, yet important, rules of sportsmanship, these problems become almost self-effacing when the word gets around that he is 'the right sort of guy,'" says Gail Evans, manager of the advertising, shooting promotion and public relations division of Remington Arms Co., Inc.

"Very few gunners like to hunt alone, and most of them welcome congenial shooting partners who speak the same language. They are, however, somewhat reluctant to run the risk of getting stuck for a day afield with some thoughtless or careless chap who ignores the niceties of field etiquette or violates the unwritten laws of sportsmanship. They make that mistake with the same individual only once.

"If you are fortunate enough this season to be invited to go hunting with an experienced gunner who knows how and where to take game, watch your step carefully," advises Evans. "You can rest assured that your every action is being observed and while your friend will probably make every effort to give you the best of everything, you can just bet your bottom dollar that you're on probation with him just the same.

"There are a few little courtesies which make up proper hunting demeanor and which, if observed, will put you in solid with your hunting companion. They'll come natural after awhile, even if the importance of them is not immediately obvious. And your observance of them will make the day far more pleasant, not only for your host, but for you, too.

"Above all things, never take a chance. Observe all the rules of safety, even though your companion doesn't. You'll impress him with your caution.

"Give your companion all the breaks. The accepted practice is to alternate on single shots. The easiest way to make your host mad is to try to 'wipe his eye.'

"Find out which side your companion shoots from . . . and then take the other side. Never shoot at birds flying over your companion's way. It is an act of discourtesy to shoot across a gunner's front unless you know his gun is empty. Then explain your action to him.

"Don't claim birds you are not absolutely sure you killed. If there's the slightest doubt, don't run the risk of being branded a 'claimer.' If your companion is 'built that way,' you'll soon find out.

"Don't try to handle your companion's dogs. And never criticize the dog's faults. Praise his good work and ignore the bad. Give the dog a chance to retrieve your birds. Look for it yourself only if absolutely necessary.

"And never hunt in your friend's favorite spot which he has shown you, unless he is along or you have his consent. Violation of this courtesy has led to the ending of many fine friendships.

"There is an old saying to the effect that 'if you want to find out about a man, get him in a poker game or take him hunting.' Remember it when you accept that invitation and see that you so conduct yourself as to warrant a repeat engagement. It's a safe bet that the word will get around and you won't be long lacking for gunning partners."

Watch Those Fires!

It must be remembered that should an area be severely burned it lays the soil open. The best part of the soil is destroyed. To replace this soil takes thousands of years. Fire can easily destroy our watersheds; lead to both wind and water erosion of our soil; destruction of homes for our wildlife; and without this forest cover our clear cool streams would be muddy and warm. They would no longer present an inspiring sight for the traveler or seeker of good forest recreation.

Some people believe that a forest fire stops when it reaches the end of the forest. This is not necessarily true. Were it so then homes, farms and more important human life would not be lost. Again it is imperative that people be constantly aware of the fire danger in forests.

Deadly Ignorance

The honest sportsman, pitting his skill with a gun against the rush of a quail, does not blaze away at hedge birds. The true angler, offering a fly or plug for bass, does not attempt to snag on a bare hook every fish he may see. Yet many a nongame bird dies because a gunner wants to pull his trigger on a target, many a useful snake is stoned because a man knows only that it's a "snake," many a wild creature is killed ignorantly.
