SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

On The Silly Side

There are "flocks" of geese and "flocks" of sheep and maybe this goose didn't know the difference. Thomas Erhart of Salisbury Mo., told Conservation Agent E. R. Carpenter of Charlton county that recently while herding his sheep across the road to a pasture, the procession was joined by a blue goose. The goose landed at the rear of the flock and proceeded to follow it to the pasture. "For five days Mr. Blue stayed with the sheep," Erhart related, "coming with them into the barnlot at night and back to the pasture of mornings, always on foot and never attempting to fly except for an occasional trip to a nearby pond and then right back with the sheep. Then the goose left and was gone three days after which it returned and stayed with the sheep for another two days."

From Conservation Agent Clyde R. Wilson of Ozark county comes this story: "Perry Cowart, Gainesville service station operator, has been quite busy lately. In addition to his regular duties he has taken upon himself the chore of trying to prevent a male bluebird from killing himself. Once or twice each day, Cowart frightens the spirited bird away from a large silvery sign hanging near the station. The bird sits in a nearby tree and every once in a while flies down and flogs his image in the sign."

For those who scoff the superstition surrounding black cats, comes this recent happening from Conservation Agent George Labuta of St. Louis county: "St. Louisian D. C. Bengel was driving along residential Page Avenue of this city one day recently when he became involved in a most unusual accident. A black cat scampered wildly across his path close upon the heels of which came a large eight-point buck deer. The cat made it but the deer did not. Result: a front fender of Bengel's car was severely damaged and the deer killed."

Still Producing

If there were some way to pin a medal on a duck, a somewhat mournful-looking shoveller hen might sport a bronze disc for reliability and faithful service to science, the Wildlife Management Institute reports.

Every year since 1947, just after the break-up of the ice on the vast delta-marshes of Manitoba, this duck, long ago dubbed "Shiela" by personnel of the delta waterfowl research station, has returned to the same little patch of grass to nest. During this time, she has produced some 60 known eggs and has returned to a spot within two hundred yards of previous nesting sites each season despite the fact that research workers at the station have taken her eggs, have trapped her repeatedly, and have daubed her wings with red paint for ease in identification. Ignoring these invasions of her privacy, she has turned up regularly each year ready to go to work as soon as spring has pushed the snows and ice north of her favorite meadow.

Shiela's activities, carefully recorded by Lyle Sows, biologist on the delta staff, have contributed valuable data on the nesting and homing habits of waterfowl that may be applied to future management programs. In the event that fate and a charge of chilled sixes should interfere with her plans for the coming year, the hunter who brings her to bag still can help her make one last contribution to human knowledge of her kind by returning her band, No. 47-604004, to the U.S. fish and wildlife service.

How 'Bout It?

Do deer really trample snakes to death? Perhaps a doe, in defense of her young, may have done so. However, according to reliable reports from game management experts, every deer pen-held exhibited the utmost terror of all snakes, regardless of the sex of the deer viewing the reptile.

It was found that even a piece of rope, held in the hand and agitated in a manner to resemble a snake, would prevent a buck deer from charging, when a club held in the hand failed of that purpose.

As for the question as to which of the deer's senses is the most acute, a query frequently put to game management officials, the answer is the deer's hearing. Air movements govern their sense of smell and their vision is very poor regarding stationary objects. But, man, are they quick to hear any rustle or noise!

Casting Minnows

When casting the minnow to a spot where you think a big fish may be lurking, cast as far into deep water as possible and retrieve slowly, pulling a few inches at a time. The chances of getting a strike depend to a large extent on the life and action given the minnow. When the strike does come, let the fish take the bait on the first run. After he has paused and started out on the second run, a strike usually will insure a fish.
