Manna Is Real

Skeptical moderns might question the Biblical "manna in the wilderness," but not the wild creatures of the woods. They know it is true, for every winter it falls for them in the form of the lowly acorn. Come wintertime they will set them down to a feast of acorns—the forest "manna" from above which falls from the woodland trees when autumn winds blow.

With the first patter of falling acorns, the little folk of the forest go forth en masse to gather up the bounty. Birds and animals, important to the well-being of mankind, depend on this manna of the forest for their chief winter food. Nobody knows how many forest ears listen for the sound of the acorns' fall, nor how many gimlet eyes search among the leaves, but biologists have found more than 186 species of wildlife that feed upon acorns.

Wild turkeys depend on acorns for their chief food from November through April. Quail sometimes feed on them all around the calendar. Squirrels, the best conservationists of all, plant thousands of acorns each fall, and return to gather only for a few for themselves and their families, leaving the others snugly bedded in the ground to sprout into a new forest of oak trees.

It is said that Indian tribes of early America made bread from acorn meal, and stories were told of their use in the South during the near-famine period of the Civil war. The yellow kernels were ground into a fine flour. Hot water was poured over this to remove the bitterness, and then a dough was made for hoeecake batter.

Probably the most prosaically practical use of acorns has been to fatten hogs. Even modern experiments have proved the value of acorns for fattening hogs, when supplemented by other foods.

But the little folk of the forest, don't ask questions nor consider the oak. They know that come wintertime they will be fed. The "forest manna" that has fallen since long before the day of Moses, for all we know, will still fall for them when autumn winds blow.

No Cause For Fear

The true sportsman has no fear of a farmer for it takes only a few minutes to get his permission to hunt and very little trouble to be careful of his property. The real trouble is the cheap type hunter who thinks he can do as he pleases. Many city people have acquired the false idea that farmers are hay-chewing hicks as pictured in cartoons. They do not realize that running a farm requires intelligence and education. Another delusion harbored by many hunters is that absence of No Trespassing signs gives them the right to enter upon any private land at will. Actually, the only unposted land upon which this can be done legally is publicly owned land. How soon will really interested sportsmen realize that they must personally go to the farmer on their own time and at their own expense and help him with his game management. They will have to do more than just buy a license and go to the country for a day of cheap shooting. They will have to realize that hunting at the farmer's expense is a thing of the past, or soon will be.

Game is as much a crop as hay or corn. Any crop requires time, money and care. Game is no exception. No one has a right to take something he did not help produce and give nothing in return. He will have to become a builder of game as well as a taker. At present there are too many ignorant and careless hunters at large for the available quantity of game.

And So It Goes

Cheesecake, as pertaining to photographs and illustrations of leggy girls, may not be on the way out but it is apparent that advertisers are borrowing more and more from the Great Outdoors for selling appeal.

A staff member of The Tennessee Conservationist made this discovery recently as she turned (casually) through the pages of a national publication. Used as eye-catchers for unrelated products and services were:

A beaver, sheaf of wheat, apple tree, nut cluster, mountain, cliff, feather, cat, lion, tiger, mountain lake, forest fire, and, of course, a dog.

Not in the same advertisement, it should be pointed out.

Good Days

If you live near a pond and can find it clear of ice and fairly clean of mud, you may surprise yourself with what you can do with a fly-rod and some trout flies—provided of course that the pond contains panfish. Too many fishermen fail to go out after panfish in what is usually called the "off season." We have found that on occasion the fish hit with real abandon and one may even fill a creel in a short time.
