

AROUND THE HOUSE

If you must bang a dry floor mop against something to shake the dust out of it, whack it against the heel of your hand. Knocking against windowills and door-jambes shortens the life of a mop.

Apartment dwellers who have no outdoor place to shake a mop can get it clean by placing the head inside a large brown paper bag; choke the mouth of the bag around the mop handle, and shake. Or, put the mop on the floor upside down, and hold a vacuum cleaner over it to draw off the dirt and dust.

To remove grass stains from washables, add a few drops of amyl acetate to a thick soap solution and rub it thoroughly into the stains. After that, rinse the garment at least three times in clear water. On whites, peroxide may be used if needed. Or flush the stain with alcohol, and then with clear water.

By using soap and water you can get a higher gloss on your woodwork or wooden floors by adding three tablespoonfuls of turpentine to the wash water. Wipe the wood with a clean dry cloth or mop when you're finished, and you'll notice the gloss. For that matter, a teaspoonful of baking soda added to the wash water will do almost as much good.

To keep paint from getting all over the handle of your brush, drive a small nail or tack into the handle just above the metal "collar" that holds the bristles. Leave the head of the tack and about a quarter of an inch besides to protrude so that, when you stop using the brush, it can be kept out of the paint by hanging the tack on the lip of the can.

FIRST AID TO THE AILING HOUSE

Water Drips Through Ceiling
QUESTION: We plan to remodel our kitchen and have a problem to contend with. The home we purchased a year ago is a two-family house. We want to remodel our kitchen on the main floor because the plaster on the ceiling is in bad condition. We now have a nine-foot ceiling and wish to lower it to eight feet. Is there some kind of waterproofing to use so that the water won't run through our ceiling when we put on the new plaster?

ANSWER: The real answer to the problem is to cover the floor of the upstairs kitchen with a good magnesite composition floor with a cove base of the same material. It should be properly laid by an experienced floor contractor. The water that runs through the floor not only ruins your ceiling but may also rot the sub-floor or joists. As the house belongs to you, there should be no difficulty in having the work done.
