Operation Hospital

"Operation Hospital" fought off public anesthesia again last Tuesday and gave itself a shot of adrenalin by changing its name and membership.

Ashland's old hospital committee, in acting with the swift sure surgeon's touch, discarded its former status with a clean scalpel-like incision and boldly took on the name, Valley View hospital committee.

New "nurses" from all over the proposed hospital district attended the meeting which continued the drive to administer a new "body" for the aged and ailing Ashland General hospital.

The new committee has retained its "chief surgeon" in charge of building, Don Lewis, recently given the title of Ashland's junior citizen for 1951.

In continuing its thoughtful, prepared campaign, it chose an education committee headed by Dick Scott of radio station KWIN to "stump" throughout the proposed district for public enlightenment regarding the financial steps and hospital accommodations that can be forthcoming.

Needless to say, the Talent-Valley View-Ashland area has wanted a new community hospital for some time, and it looks like the right "staff" has been chosen to get it.

We have firm hopes that William Ernest Henley's quotation, "the hospital, grey, quiet, old, where life and death like friendly chaffers meet," will be changed as soon as possible to "the hospital, BRIGHT, MODERN, AIRY, CONVENIENT, quiet, where life and death like friendly chaffers meet."

Ashland High Seniors

Principal Roland Parks of the Ashland Senior high school reported this week on the results of a roll call of the 1952 seniors regarding their occupational preference and college plans.

He told us we could do anything we wanted to with the information, so the following is some doin':

Out of the 74 seniors, 11 still haven't decided on their occupation; 14 have no college choice; 15 are undecided as to college choice; 30 favor attending either SOCE as a first choice or as an alternate; one out of the 74 wants to be a minister and one wants to do Christian work; and, believe it or not, one wants to work for the Southern Pacific railroad.

As for the 11 who still aren't decided as to what they want to do, we recommend working at some type of job before attending college. A well-known eastern educator once said that "I would rather the high school graduates of this nation who don't know what they want to be would get a job and figure out what they want to be rather than waste their time in college." These are very wise words. The tender age of 18 can stand a mature switch to a job-toughened 20 or 21.

To those who put SOC as an alternate choice and to those 15 who put down "undecided" as to college preference, we recommend with all our intelligence, based upon personal contact with the personnel and curriculum, a choice of Southern Oregon college.

This is why: It doesn't matter whether you want to be a teacher or not, SOC can give you a junior certificate that is accepted without question at any college in this state and in most on the coast. It offers you pre-legal, pre-medicine, pre-science, etc., including a general liberal arts background and a complete secretarial course for those seeking such training. And, further, it offers excellent accredited training for a lot less than you would have to pay if you left Ashland. In brief, it makes it possible to attend a good school at a minimum of expense. If you are looking for a bargain in education, you can do your shopping right here in Ashland.

In this age of materialistic living, it is very gratifying to find that two people out of 74 want to go forth and work for the greatly neglected spiritual side of life. We would like to see four or five, but two "can have the strength of 20" if their hearts are in it. Bully for the two!

As for that young student who expressed a desire for work on the SP—All we can say is "Go Western Pacific, young man, go WESTERN PACIFIC." They cater to local traffic with diesel-run Budd cars.

Communications

Southern Oregon News Review
 Dear Sirs,

Ashland and its environs are fortunate in having unusually fine cultural advantages, most of which are available because of public opinion largely developed by the newspaper. You have given freely of your editorial, news, and advertising space in support of these cultural assets. You have faithfully and regularly given expression to your constructive thoughts on the Oregon Shakespearean festival. Vining repertory, Southern Oregon college, Southern Oregon Little symphony, and others. All of these cultural achievements have been outstanding because of the informed, aroused public consciousness developed by our communicative agencies. You are herewith extended unbounded thanks for the part you and your paper have played in making richer and fuller the lives of the citizenry in southern Oregon and of the students attending SOCE.

Sincerely yours,
 Elmo N. Stevenson
 President, SOCE

BOOST THE BOOSTERS

The student council at Southern Oregon college last week heard some "distressing" news from Sam Hersh, president of the local Red Raiders' Booster club.

According to the account by Jack Young in the college newspaper, it went like this:

(Quoting Hersh) "My news is distressing to me and my news will be distressing to many students. We have decided to disband the Boosters' club at the end of this year. . . . About three years ago a small group of Ashland merchants who were interested in SOC athletics banded together. . . . We worked hard and we worked alone. We got no, or maybe I should say, little, help from the students. . . . We got little help from the administration, in fact we got so little help from the college we have come to the conclusion the college is not interested in our 18 scholarships, our sponsored radio broadcasts of SOC games, our banquets, our talent spotting, our time and money, that I am told to bring this distressing news to you. But I am also told to tell you something else.

"If the Order of the 'O' will work with us, if the students will come to games, and if the administration will help us a teensy bit, we will continue the club for another year. . . . I hope I am right in judging you and that you will not leave me in this distressing condition much longer. . . ."

This is indeed a sad tale of woe. Part of it is true. Part of it is rubbish. And, if you read between the lines, it amounts to about all the trouble that any team has on any campus of any small college, and BIG too, throughout the country.

Unless you have a student body of 5,000 or better, which mostly lives on campus, you can't begin to fill the stands when the team is losing most of its games. The local booster club sprang up after the phenomenal seasons following the war when the Raiders were on top of the heap. Since then, interest has fallen in football each season and now is dropping in basketball.

With the cut that the armed forces are taking in available material, it would seem that the power of SOC will also remain at a somewhat lower level than it has been. With this in mind, local fans are just going to have to get "accustomed" to what's what for some time to come.

A major portion of this job rests with the student spirit. This corner agrees with Hersh that the student body isn't giving its team support. But, can hardly agree with the statement that the administration isn't cooperating as much as it can. The administration in general, and President Elmo Stevenson in particular, spend 25 hours a day boosting SOC and know full well the favorable publicity that a school can get from winning athletic teams.

But, this is the point: athletics are secondary to education; it is true that good teams build up a college in enrollment and spirit to a certain extent; but if it's so small that it can't spend a lot of money and time to do so, then something must be sacrificed. The administration is concerned presently with new buildings—a library and dormitory. It also needs a new science building, and these things come first.

With the situation facing the administration, it's up to a group like the Boosters to be an advisor and benefactor to the athletic department, something SOC cannot afford itself. Sure, maybe support has dropped off, but if it keeps falling, the only ones we will have to blame are ourselves and the students. Although it may look sort of funny to see Boosters huddling together alone in a small knot at the games, it may make the students so ashamed for their lack of attendance that things will change. It's time the old 'uns taught the young 'uns a few things about loyalty—win, lose or draw.

BRAVO: Past, and the under- signed is sure, FUTURE support by the Red Raiders' Booster club.

BOO: Lack of support by SOC's student body.

PROPAGANDA TOO HIGH

Our aim is too high, in combating communism in the Middle East and other similar countries, a college president told a luncheon group where many high state officials had assembled in Salem this week.

"We talk about tractors, political science, nylons, and a free press while the Russians are talking about bellies and backs," Dr. Harry Dillon, of Linfield college reported on his Arabian visit.

Extolling a free press as a democratic principle can't mean much to masses of people who can't read. They need better hand tools — hoes rather than tractors.

Letter From Washington...

By Hon. Harris Ellsworth
 Congressman, 4th District

Our great federal government has a wondrous and complicated system for getting ready to send to congress, via the President, its request for money — and the request must be made annually. In other words, the whole system functions each year. The President has just recently submitted his budget to congress. He says in his message that he must have $85.4 billions to spend between July 1, 1952 and June 30, 1953. It is called the fiscal '53 budget.

The way the budget-making system works is something like this: Each government department or agency has what is generally called its budget officer.

This person gathers up the figures which, when totalled, indicate the amount of money needed (or at least wanted) by the department for the coming fiscal year. The figures are taken to the head of the department who looks them over and then decides just how much he will request. That figure does not, however, go to the President—it goes to the bureau of the budget. There some bright young men hold what they call hearings at which the departments explain why they need the amounts requested. Then the bureau of the budget prepares the figures to be submitted to the President and by him to the congress. He, and his White House staff, are the last word on the suggested budget may be, and often is, changed materially from the way it comes from the bureau, before it is brought to congress.

From time to time I have discussed budget-making with people from the executive departments. It seems to be quite a game which some of the old-fashioned departments haven't learned to play very skillfully. The general scheme seems to be to ask the budget officer for about twice what you hope to get. Then the head of the agency will lop off 10 or 15 per cent. The bureau of the budget will peel it another 30 per cent, the congress will probably knock off another 10 per cent and there you are—just what you hoped to get! One complaint I heard about the bureau of the budget was rather more amusing than disturbing. It seems the young fellows who conduct the hearings and who, no doubt, have a great deal to do with making the final figures, are very young—most of them under 30 and with little or no background (this is merely repeating what was told me by one who faces them). They sit and ask uninformed and inconsequential questions. That might not be so bad, said my informant, but, as he put it, the trouble is they change these youngsters every year so that the school-teaching has to be done all over again each time. I gather, from the sigh he heaved, that the procedure is something of a headache, and tiresome.

could look at the matter impartially.

After ten days the governor has had no report from the committee.

The Portland General Electric Company is attempting to build a dam on the Deschutes river. The project is being opposed by the State Fish commission, sport fishing clubs and those who favor public ownership and use of the state's water power.

The State Committee for Industrial Development was created by Governor McKay last year to help Oregon get more defense contracts.

CAMPAIGN GALLIPOT

All over Oregon and across the nation democrats majored in political news the past week.

Senator McMahon (Mr. A Bomb) of Connecticut asked that his name be withdrawn from the Illinois democratic presidential primary.

Douglas A. MacArthur requested that his name be removed from the Illinois republican presidential primary.

Attorney General George Neuner is expected to rule this week whether the name of General Eisenhower will appear on the democratic presidential ballot in Oregon. State Senator Thomas Mahoney filed the general's name as a democrat.

Eisenhower has since stated he is a republican. Republicans declare the Oregon law is emphatic that any candidate for president must file under his political affiliation.

The democratic state central committee will meet in Portland Feb. 2 to elect a successor to State Chairman Les Josslin and discuss suitable party candidates. In his letter of resignation Josslin said, "The state committee should have as its chairman a person able to devote more than the limited time at my disposal."

Upstate democrats want Howard Morgan, Monmouth to succeed Josslin — say they are weary of bickering among factions in Multnomah county.

Ex-Mayor Joe Carson is back to make Portland his home. Democratic kingmakers are huddling for a statute-of-liberty play. For the past 12 years he has been on the Atlantic coast as a member of the U. S. Maritime Commission and executive vice-president of the U. S. Propeller Club.

State Tax Commissioner Robert D. MacLean, Waldport, has filed his candidacy for delegate to the democratic national convention.

Lloyd E. Haynes will be a candidate for state representative at the state primaries.

The Bennett recall is a slippery trombone affair. Recall sponsors blow a blast, Bennett blasts back that he will run for Mayor if recalled from his position as city commissioner, then a two weeks requiem for the recallers, followed by another recall blast and ditto all over again and again.
