Vote For World Leadership

Tomorrow Oregonians go to the polls for a primary election that will undoubtedly have a profound effect on the Republican convention in Chicago in July and on the crucial general election in the fall.

Our vote will go to General Eisenhower.

We shall vote for Eisenhower because we believe that he, more than any other candidate, possesses five essential qualities which the American people must demand of any national leader in these critical times: strength, courage, integrity, knowledge, and personal appeal.

There have been attempts made to discredit the general since he was first mentioned as a possible Republican nominee. Some of them, such as the smears which we discussed in these columns last week, will have little effect, we feel. Others, such as the "21 questions" on specific issues advanced by Taft supporters, may be effective in lessening Eisenhower's vote. But as fair as this approach seems on the surface (discounting, for the moment, the fact that the questions are loaded questions), we are convinced that they actually cloud the issues, rather than clear them.

It is our contention that one votes for a man for high office on the basis of his philosophy and personal qualifications, and that a man's stand on specific issues only goes to reveal these more important and profound considerations. Therefore, a stand on specific issues is a secondary, not a primary consideration.

We will readily admit that Eisenhower's feeling on some specific issues of this campaign are not definitely known, since the general is an honorable man and has refused to campaign in uniform or to do anything that might endanger the important task with which he is now faced in Europe or lower his prestige as commander of the allied forces against communism in any way.

The fact that he has refused to divide his energies at this time reveals one quality, integrity, of which we spoke. Anyone who knows anything of his conduct during the last war will not question his courage or his strength. His popular appeal — an extremely important factor not only to Eisenhower the candidate but to Eisenhower as a potential leader of a people who must be united — is revealed in the popular vote he has received in earlier primaries. And then comes what is quite possibly the most important consideration of them all — his knowledge.

With the United States the natural (even if unwilling) leader of the free nations of the world, with national defense expenditures taking the lion's share of a huge national budget, with our very survival depending on what we do in foreign policy, with our domestic policies tied to and dependent upon foreign policy and foreign commitments, we must have a man with knowledge of foreign policy and defense and with the ability to get along with and inspire the peoples of other nations. Eisenhower, more than any other man, fills the bill. Not even Governor Warren, whom we admire, has the general's qualifications to lead not only this great nation but the free world.

And don't forget it: The leader of this country IS the leader of the free world.

Think — and vote for Eisenhower.

Welcomes Demos Into 'Ike' Fold

Southern Oregon News Review Ashland, Oregon To the Editor:

When Eisenhower picked up a sizable Democratic write-in vote in the Massachusetts primary, members of the Taft group complained that this was a threat to the "sacred" bi-partisan system of the United States. They even referred to it as "an unholy alliance."

Mr. Lodge's retort to these remarks is exactly my opinion, and I feel it should be branded into the mind of every Republican in the nation.

Lodge said: "There simply aren't enough registered Republicans to elect a President. If every Republican voted next fall, their candidate would still have only 32% of the vote sewed up. You can't win elections by going around shaking hands with yourself."

Many of my Democratic friends have said they would vote for "Ike" if he were nominated. I deeply resent their intention being labeled "unholy alliance."

We "Ike" supporters who have registered Republican certainly do welcome the interest of Democrats, Independents and stray Whigs and Federalists who might still be kicking around. In fact we urge that you write in (carefully spelling his full name correctly) Dwight D. Eisenhower on your primary ballot, and be sure to put an "X" to the left of his name.

Together we can elect a president and a party chosen by, and tailored to the desires of, the genuine majority of the voters — for a change.

But first we must get "Ike" nominated. If you aren't registered Republican, write in: "X DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER."

Prove that the "holiest" thing in politics is the will of the people, who are determined this time to be heard!

Sincerely, Winston K. Marks Box 332 Ashland, Oregon

Our Town

LAUGHS WERE FREQUENT

in presentations of the three comedies in the Vining Company repertoire these past few weeks, but in a rather strange switch from the usual, perhaps the heartiest laugh came from the stage, instigated in the audience.

It happened during a production of "Arsenic and Old Lace," on an evening when the size of the audience was nothing to brag about. But the audience was enthusiastic, if small, and included many people well-known to members of the acting company. One of them was the Reverend A. H. MacDonnell, whose singular voice and laugh is easily recognizable. Just before the third act curtain, the Brewster sisters make their move to poison their thirteenth victim and the audience, realizing what was about to take place, fell into the accustomed stunned silence — with the exception of "Father Mac." "Oh mercy me," he boomed, and punctuated the remark with a resounding guffaw.

The players, on stage and off, did little to control their laughter.

Word has it that EDDY BARON, one of the most popular members of the Vining Company and one of the most talented comedians in these parts, will leave for another tour of duty with the Navy almost immediately. Too bad, too, since Eddy, an old Shakespearean Festival hand, would have made an excellent addition to that company, particularly with the plays to be given this year loaded with comic roles.

And speaking of the Navy, this has nothing to do with Eddy or Vining, but a young man of our acquaintance who was involved in one of the Navy's training programs for a short while but never got any closer to the ocean than Gold Hill, received his orders to report for duty several days ago. Sea duty, that is.

"I don't know what kind of boat I'm going to be on," he said. We were properly horrified and reprimanded him severely for referring to a ship as a boat. "Anything that you do much sailing on in the Navy will be a ship," we said, "and you'd better learn that before some tough boatswain's mate pins your ears back. It's unheard of to call a ship a boat in the Navy."

We tried to impress this upon him by telling him a story we had heard from Dr. Donald MacDougall, a story teller of some note, about one of his favorite characters, Calvin Coolidge, and a great Naval faux pas.

It seems that Silent Cal and Mrs. C. were out one day, with his Naval Aide, to review the fleet (this while Cal was president). His first move was to sit down with his hat on while the fleet sailed proudly by, but his next move was even worse.

"Oh mama," he said, "Look at all the pretty boats!" It is said that the admiral accompanying him jumped aboard, but this cannot be substantiated.

WE ONCE KNEW A SAILOR

during the late war, a transplanted coal miner from West Virginia, who was even worse than Cal, because his sins against Navy nomenclature were deliberate. It was early in the war and he was just out of boot camp and just aboard ship when one day, in his eagerness to make himself useful, he picked up a swab and asked a chief boatswain's mate, an old Asiatic, if he wanted him to "mop the floor."

The chief turned beet-red. "You mean swab the deck, you blankety-blank reserve land-lubber," he boomed. "There's no such thing as a 'floor' in the Navy!"

"Look, bud," the coal miner said, "I'm perfectly willing to learn to do useful things around this boat, but ever since I learned to talk this has been the floor, that has been the wall, that has been the ceiling, and one of these things has been a mop, and I'm not learning to talk again for anybody."

He didn't, either. The last time we saw him he had several years in and had acquired a number of battle scars, but the wall had never become the bulkhead nor the ceiling the overhead, and he still had his feet planted firmly on the floor.

He was so stubborn about it that no sailor we knew would make a liberty with him.

OPEN ROAD BIDS

The state highway commission is to open bids on May 27 or 28 in Portland on a paving and grading project in Talent and Phoenix. The project covers 69 miles.

Letter from Washington . . .

By HON. HARRIS ELLSWORTH Member of Congress, 4th District

If this session of Congress adjourns about July 1 as is being planned, it has now run more than two-thirds of its length. The session began the first week in January and has completed four months of work, with two months to go. Suppose then we take a look at what has been accomplished thus far.

A quick reference to the most important legislation is always available on the back page of the daily Calendar of the House. The Calendar, by the way, grows thicker daily with the advance of the legislative term. Now it is a book containing nearly 200 pages. In it, however, is a complete history of all legislation reported from committees pending in this Congress. The back page has this heading: "Status of Major Bills — Second Session." The space is blank except for a line devoted to the U.M.T. bill which was considered in the House but sent back to committee. The story on appropriation bills, which must originate in the House, is better — all eleven of them having been passed by the House. Three of these have been acted upon by the Senate thus far. So the score on major legislation, except for appropriations bills is zero for this session.

The Calendar lists only two secondary bills which have been through both Houses and through conference this year and made into law. One has to do with the illegal entry of aliens, and the other is a bill to transfer certain investigations of employees from the F.B.I. to the Civil Service Commission.

The future, the remainder of this Congress, will apparently not be bristling with excitement or constructive action. The House has passed a few bills which are still pending in the Senate including the armed services catalog bill, the fair trade bill, a bill to change railroad unemployment insurance act benefits, and some others. Bills cleared by the House Rules Committee and awaiting floor action include the revision of the communications act of 1934 (radio bill), a bill to approve the Puerto Rican constitution, and the regular bi-annual Federal highway act amendments. Very few bills reported by legislative committees are now awaiting Rules Committee action.

In one field, however, this Congress has been outstanding. More investigations by Congressional committees are now in progress or have been conducted during this term of Congress than ever before. This is one of the important functions of Congress. Some fine work has been done and there will be more revelations to come. I suppose the reason for all of this investigating activity is that there has never before been an administration which needed investigating so badly.

That is a quick, thumb-nail sketch of the 82nd Congress to date. The legislative committees are working, of course, and more legislation will be reported to the floor, but the summary above is the score up to now.

President Truman, you will recall, campaigned for re-election in 1948 on what he asserted was the bad record of the 80th Republican-controlled Congress. (The four years since have proved that Congress to have been more constructive and productive of good legislation than any Congress in a couple of decades.) The President's party has controlled this, the 82nd Congress. We Republican members have been in the minority. I wonder what Mr. Truman will have to say about this "election year" Congress when he campaigns for his party this time.

To Live In Peace Our Goal, Carlson

The need for the people of the world to live together is the major problem confronting the people of the United States, according to Sen. Frank Carlson (R. Kans.), director of the National Committee for Eisenhower. He emphasized the issue in an address last Friday before the student body at Southern Oregon college.

"We are moving too fast," Sen. Carlson said. "In these days of rapid communication, it is more important than ever to study means to encourage harmonious living among peoples of the world."

The senator said we face two issues — whether to accept capitalism or communism, democracy or totalitarianism, or Christianity or paganism. He urged students to take an active part in community life, including politics, after graduating, stating that survival or a vigorous two-party system can be the only salvation for the democratic system.

Warning up to current political issues after having delivered a studied non-political address, Sen. Carlson in answer to a question from the floor said that Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower is an excellent prospect for the presidency because of his military background. The Kansas senator explained that 80 percent of annual appropriations is earmarked for defense, adding that legislators are reluctant to cut the military expenses except Ever hear of this American Revolution?

This American Revolution took place without muskets, without riot, without bloodshed. But it was one of the most important in history... a "revolution" stemming from the development of the container known as the tin can. Consider how the can-making and canning industries have bettered our economy through mass-production and utilization of modern containers for more than 1500 products:

1. These modern containers have improved public health by making available a varied and nutritious diet.
2. They have provided more and better jobs in manufacturing, processing and distribution.
3. They have increased and stabilized farm income by lifting seasonal limitations on marketing.
4. These modern containers have increased purchasing power and stimulated economic development.
5. They have turned wasteland into fertile acres, thereby increasing the property value of farm land.
6. They have made available better products packaged more conveniently and economically.

Only in America — where a free, competitive economy encourages and stimulates enterprise — could such a wonderful "revolution" have occurred.
