

SEVEN-YEAR DEAL. Japanese pitcher Masahiro Tanaka throws a ball during a morning workout at the indoor training facility of the Rakuten Golden Eagles in Sendai, northeastern Japan. The New York Yankees capped an offseason spending spree by agreeing to a $155-million, seven-year contract with prized 25-year-old righthander Tanaka. (AP Photo/Kyodo News)

Tanaka says Yankees appreciated him most

By Jim Armstrong
AP Sports Writer

TOKYO — Japanese pitcher Masahiro Tanaka says he chose to play for the New York Yankees because they appreciated him the most.

Speaking in Japan after agreeing to a $155-million, seven-year deal with the Yankees, Tanaka said, “They gave me the highest evaluation and are a world-famous team.”

Tanaka said he was “relieved” the deal was done and looked forward to standing on the mound at Yankee Stadium.

In addition to the personal deal with Tanaka, the Yankees must pay a $20 million fee to his Japanese team, the Rakuten Golden Eagles.

His agreement calls for $22 million in each of the first six seasons and $23 million in 2020, and it allows him to terminate the deal after the 2017 season and become a free agent.

Japan’s last World War II straggler dies at age 91

By Elaine Kurtenbach
The Associated Press

TOKYO — Hiroo Onoda, the last Japanese imperial soldier to emerge from hiding in a jungle in the Philippines and surrender, 29 years after the end of World War II, has died. He was 91 years old.

Onoda died last month at a Tokyo hospital after a brief stay. Chief government spokesman Yoshihide Suga expressed his condolences, praising Onoda for his strong will to live and indomitable spirit.

“After World War II, Mr. Onoda lived in the jungle for many years and when he returned to Japan, I felt that finally, the war was finished. That’s how I felt,” Suga said.

Onoda was an intelligence officer who came out of hiding, erect but emaciated, in fatigues patched many times over, on Lubang island in the Philippines in March 1974, on his 52nd birthday. He surrendered only when his former commander flew there to reverse his 1945 orders to stay behind and spy on American troops.

Onoda and another World War II holdout, Sgt. Shoichi Yokoi, who emerged from the jungle in 1972, received massive heroes’ welcomes upon returning home.

Before and during the war, Japanese were taught absolute loyalty to the nation and the emperor. Soldiers in the Imperial Army observed a code that said death was preferable to surrender.

Onoda refused to give up, despite at least four searches during which family members appealed to him over loudspeakers and flights dropped leaflets urging him to surrender.

In his formal surrender to Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos, Onoda wore his 30-year-old imperial army uniform, cap, and sword, all still in good condition.

After the initial sensation of his return home wore off, Onoda bought a ranch in Brazil. He later was head of a children’s nature school in northern Japan.

“I don’t consider those 30 years a waste of time,” Onoda said in a 1995 interview with The Associated Press. “Without that experience, I wouldn’t have my life today.”

Still, he showed a great zeal for making up for years lost. “I do everything twice as fast so I can make up for the 30 years,” Onoda said. “I wish someone could eat and sleep for me so I can work 24 hours a day.”

The son of a teacher, Onoda worked for a Japanese trading firm in Shanghai after finishing high school in 1939. Three years later, he was drafted and trained at a military academy.

In December 1944, he was sent to Lubang, about 90 miles southwest of Manila. Most other Japanese soldiers surrendered when U.S. troops landed on Lubang in February 1945, though hundreds remained missing for years after the war.

DETERMINED SOLDIER. In this March 1974 file photo, Hiroo Onoda, wearing his 30-year-old imperial army uniform, cap, and sword, walks down a slope while heading for a helicopter landing site on Lubang Island for a flight to Manila after coming out of hiding in the jungle on the island in the Philippines. Onoda, the last Japanese imperial soldier to emerge from hiding and surrender after World War II, has died. He was 91 years old. Onoda passed away January 16, 2014 at a Tokyo hospital. (AP Photo)

As he struggled to feed himself, Onoda’s mission became one of survival. He stole rice and bananas from local people down the hill, and shot their cows to make dried beef, triggering occasional skirmishes.

The turning point came on February 20, 1974, when he met a young globetrotter, Norio Suzuki, who ventured to Lubang in pursuit of Onoda.

Suzuki quietly pitched his camp in lonely jungle clearings and waited. “Oi,” Onoda eventually called out, and began speaking with him.

Suzuki returned to Japan and contacted the government, which located Onoda’s superior — Maj. Yoshimi Taniguchi — and flew him to Lubang to deliver his surrender order in person.

Associated Press writer Mari Yamaguchi contributed to this report.

The Asian Reporter is published on the first & third Monday each month.

News page advertising deadlines for our next issue are:

February 17 to March 2 edition:

Space reservations due:

Wednesday, February 12 at 1:00pm

Artwork due:

Thursday, February 13 at 1:00pm

For more information, call (503) 283-4440 or e-mail <ads@asianreporter.com>.

Oregon Immigration Attorney

Jimmy Namgyal

Call today to discuss your case
(503) 726-1077
www.namgyallaw.com

- Green Card
- Spouse Visa
- DACA
- Naturalization
- Employment-Based Petitions
- Fiancé Visa
- Investment-Based Petitions

5200 SW Meadows Road, Suite 150, Lake Oswego, OR 97035

Siefman & Pond • Attorneys at Law

Aggressive, Compassionate & Personalized Representation

Specializing in:
Criminal Defense • Driving Crimes • Felonies & Misdemeanors • OLCC & DMV Administrative Law
Auto Accidents/Personal Injury • Estate Planning

FREE CONSULTATIONS
(503) 726-1716
www.bettercallalawyer.com

Celebrating diversity

At TriMet, we understand the value of roadmaps for getting people where they need to be. Our goal is to have our workforce mirror the diversity of the Portland metropolitan area. We encourage, support and celebrate the people of color and women in our workforce.

Visit trimet.org/careers

