GOLD CERTIFICATION. In the North Habitat section of the Oregon Zoo's Elephant Lands area, a geothermal "slinky" system directs heat created as a byproduct of cooling the swimming pools for the polar bears through rows of slinky-like coiled pipes buried eight to 12 feet underground to warm the indoor portion of the elephant habitat. now preheats water for elephant bathing and other uses. The warmed water, which is stored in a 1,500-gallon tank in the building's mechanical room, reduces the amount of natural gas required to heat it.

Natural ventilation
Natural ventilation is now used in the indoor facility. Large louvers on the walls and roof open automatically based on outdoor temperatures, so about 75 percent of the building's fan power is eliminated during natural-ventilation mode.

Cross-laminated timber
The Elephant Plaza building took runner-up honors for Sustainable Project of the Year in the Portland Business Journal's 2015 Better Bricks awards. One of the buildings was the first commercial project in Oregon to use cross-laminated timber (CLT), a material made from planks of wood cross-hatched together into large structural sheets. Steel and concrete take a lot of energy to produce, and CLT — which stores carbon — can have a positive environmental impact over the life cycle of a building.

The Oregon Zoo is recognized worldwide for its Asian elephant program, which has spanned more than 60 years. Considered highly endangered in their range countries, Asian elephants are threatened by habitat loss, conflict with humans, and disease. It is estimated that just 40,000 to 50,000 elephants remain in fragmented populations from India to Borneo.

The Oregon Zoo is located at 4001 S.W. Canyon Road in Portland. To learn more, call (503) 226-1561 or visit <www.oregonzoo.org>.

Ultraconservative lobby backs Japan PM charter change drive

reportedly includes many of Abe's cabinet ministers and hundreds of national and local lawmakers.

The organization holds lectures and other events to spread its views and defends Japan's wartime atrocities while accusing China and South Korea of lying or exaggerating their suffering. It also believes the U.S. postwar occupation brainwashed Japanese with guilt and that education since the war was self-degrading.
