Thai entrepreneur pushing insects as the snack of the future

CRUNCHY CRITTERS. Employees sort crickets for size at the Smile cricket farm in Ratchaburi province, southwest of Bangkok, Thailand. Insects have long been part of the diet of poor rural Thais, but entrepreneur Thatnat Chanthatham — inspired by studies showing bugs are high in protein and raising them does minimal damage to the environment — hopes to broaden the market for baked bugs by packaging them like potato chips and selling them in convenience stores and supermarkets.
