Out of the Joke Book

A Bit Unruly.

"Is that bull over in Mr. Lathrop's pasture good-natured?" inquired the new schoolmistress, with some apprehension in her voice. "I asked because I wanted to cross the pasture last night, and I was afraid he might be ugly."

Mr. Peaslee surveyed the young lady with kindly eyes, and hesitated before he replied.

"W-well," he conceded, at length, "it might be a mite risky—you with that red sweater on, and all—to undertake to cross that pasture when he's right handy. He might take a notion to chase you and then again he mightn't."

"I ain't one to slander any of my neighbors' property," he went on, apologetically, "but I know as Lathrop can blame me if I don't say more'n recite facts to you. I ain't givin' any opinion, y' understand. I'm jest tellin' you what's happened, and lettin' you make up your own mind to suit yourself."

"When Lathrop fust got that animal, he had a Swede workin' for him, and he had the care of the bull 'bout all the time while he stayed here. That Swede was a kind of stupid critter, and I guess he got careless. 'T any rate, one day we heard a bellerin' goin' on up there in the pasture, and the Swede hollernin' at the top of his voice, so we all grabbed pitchforks and put up there as hard as we could pelt, and we didn't any more'n get there in time, as 'twas.

"After we men—there was five of us, with pitchforks—had braddled the bull away from the man, we got him—the man, I mean—over the fence, and kinder went over him for injuries. He had one broken arm and two broken legs and besides that he was trod up considerble. And while we was sortin' him over, it took three men to keep the bull from gettin' over the fence and havin' another go at him."

"And ever since that time," concluded Mr. Peaslee, judicially, "I've sort of had my doubts about that animal. In fact, I can't help thinkin' that he's a kind of unruly beast."

The Work Cure.

"Little Miss" was waiting for Johns to come and spade her flower bed early one beautiful spring morning. After waiting until her patience was gone, she began her own spading, in a most determined and provoked manner.

It was not long before old John appeared, with an amused smile on his old black face, and his tattered hat in hand, bowing and apologizing most humbly,
