RHODES SCHOLARSHIP FOR LANE COUNTY BOY

Luton Ackerson of Coburg Attains Highest Scholastic Honor Possible in U. S.

Luton Ackerson, of Coburg, age 23, a graduate of the University of Oregon in 1915, has received the appointment for the Cecil Rhodes scholarship at Oxford University, in England. This is considered one of the highest scholastic honors which any student in the United States can attain.

Ackerson was the only one of the three Oregon candidates to successfully pass the examination which is necessary before the committee will recommend the applicant to receive the scholarship. In addition to the honor, it carries with it a remuneration of $300 per year, approximately $1500. The scholarship is for three years' duration.

Mr. Ackerson is now principal of the Richland, Oregon, high school, in Baker county. He will start his work in England in September, 1916. Due to the comparatively short terms at the English institution an opportunity is given to the scholarship students to travel through Europe.

The appointing of students to this scholarship is not based upon scholarship alone, but he must be highly recommended by university authorities, ministers, and business men.

What is Homeopathy?

Many have asked the question What is Homeopathy, what are the laws governing its use and many like inquiries have been made. In a series of articles I will try to explain and make clear. This great school of medicine was founded by a professor in Germany's most boasted college in Berlin; even by his enemies, Hahnemann was recognized as the greatest mind of his time and today he is still held as the peer of all.

"What is Homeopathy?" It is a method of treating sick people in accordance with the formula "similia similibus curentur"—let likes be treated by likes. Homeopathy is the art of healing by administering a medicine, which if given to a healthy person, would produce symptoms similar to those observed in the patient. It is a definite method in harmonious accord with a dictum of nature. The method offers no affront to nature, it studies, then seeks to work in harmony with certain unvarying natural laws. It is a guiding therapeutic rule, a principle which in its sphere of action is as constant, certain and immutable as are nature's laws everywhere. It does not leave one helplessly waiting for the slow, perilous teaching of accumulated personal experience; experience with its possibilities in the way of mistakes, accidents, failures, so fraught with peril to others; experience which not only mounts on its dead self to higher things, but too frequently on the dead selves of its trusting friends and patients.

The law of similars is not restricted to drug giving; it applies to the use of any influence, mechanical, dietic, physio, electrical or otherwise classified, which is capable of disturbing health. Such influences whatever they may be, can be utilized Homeopathically.

We know it to be such a law exactly as any scientist knows his working rule to be founded on a law of nature; by patient and exact experimentation, and by the reiterated and exact results obtained.

To cure a patient, the picture of his disease must be carefully compared with a drug picture and that drug picture and that drug selected which bears the greatest resemblance to his symptoms. Then the drug should be given in a dose just powerful enough to stimulate the life force to an effort which will enable it to overcome the attacking force. It being in sympathy with nature's strivings makes a small dose act with great power. This is the reason why a person in health might possibly take a bottle full of medicine and not be greatly hurt by it, while a person whose symptoms were like what the drug would produce on the healthy man, could not take the same amount with impunity.

It was thought in former times and is often tacitly taught by many today, that drugs have curative action, it is not sufficiently recognized that their curative action is a secondary and dependent issue. It is easy to show that drugs are primarily sick making things. Calling them medicines does not make them curative. It is the very fact that they do have power to disturb normal conditions in healthy people that makes them of possible use in the treatment of people whose normal conditions have by other causes been disturbed. This point is not sufficiently realized. Drugs are the disturbers of the peace of the economy. The question which has always faced our profession has been how to use that disturbing influence in a curative way. We begin by recognition, founded on experiment that drugs in certain quantities or doses must and do act, whenever and to whomever administered, in practically the same way; that is, they produce similar effects upon all people, were it otherwise, drugs would be simply unreliable, unknowable, and highly dangerous agents; of no therapeutic use under the rule of similars or any other rule.

The proving of drugs therefore—the ascertaining by exact, reiterated experiment just what powers are inherent in each drug—became one of the most obvious duties of the early Homeopathist. But until Hahnemann's day no one had insisted that knowledge of the action of remedy is the smallest quality drugs could be obtained only that will restore health.

Third: Not a physiological action, but a dynamic energy is the force we seek to employ.

Fourth: Every diseased condition presents a picture to which may be found, in the provings on the healthy of some remedy, a corresponding picture.

Fifth: A remedy thus found and applied to the existing condition will eradicate the disease, if it be eradicable.

Sixth: A single remedy at a time, unmixd and unaided by adjuvants, accessory or assistant, is the only remedy required.

Homeopathy has certain fixed rules based upon law, which guide the true Homeopathist in his prescribing, and may be summarized as follows:

First: The medicines used should be especially prepared, potentized, or raised in dynamic force, to a plane equal to the vital disturbance of the patient.

Second: In every case of illness, the requisite dose of
