THE OTHER SIX MEN

"A girl's attitude toward men should be an important element in her training," declared Rev. L. S. Cupp in his sermon on "Your Father's Daughter," at the Eugene Christian church, Sunday evening. "Trust men, but do not entrust yourself lightly to them. It is nonsense to assume that all men are hunters and all women game. Most men are worthy of your trust. Even bad men will respect you, if you make them. Better to find yourself mistaken in one man than to embitter your whole life with the poison of distrust."

"No man can harm you, no man can break your life, or thwart your destiny without your consent. The greatest harm any man can do you against your will, is to kill you. Trust men. Be frank and unafraid."

"Why embarrass your relations with all men by the conceit that they may wish to marry you, or the fear they may wish to harm you? Of the thousands of men you meet in a lifetime, perhaps a half a dozen, if you are fortunate, may wish to marry you. And not more than half a dozen will wish to harm you. So why embarrass yourself, every time you meet a pleasant man, by asking yourself, 'Is this one of the six who will wish to marry me, or one of the six who will wish to harm me?' No man can marry you, or harm you, without first asking your permission in some form. The simplest solution is to wait until you are asked."

"Do not cast all romance out of your life, but have principle enough to see there is no romance in bad things, especially in fast men. Most women who admire the fast man come to a bad end. Keep your soul white from all effort to fascinate men. Make your reputation among men correspond with your real character."

More good advice is contained in the minister's sermon—admonishing mothers to be in the confidence of their daughters, teaching them the things they should know.

The minister's generalizations are true. In the vast majority of cases men respect women just in the measure that the women respect themselves, but, unfortunately, there are the six who will wish to harm, and now and then out of that six there will be one who is determined in his purpose to do evil. That confidence in the integrity of a man, and in one's ability to protect one's self may be shattered is a tragedy no less heart-rending because it is the exception and not the rule.

A COMMUNITY SCHOOL

Gaston, in Washington county, has in its new $12,000 school building a model for all small communities. "No district in Oregon with so small a population as Gaston has a better one," says Dr. Fred C. Ayer, professor of education in the University of Oregon, who delivered the dedicatory address.

It is not only a school house, but a community center building. The literary and reading room is open to the public evenings and Saturday afternoons. It has a phonograph and an abundance of records. A state traveling library will be another welcome feature. As Gaston was without a good public hall an auditorium to seat 400 was provided and may be used for all public gatherings.

The principal of the school, R. E. Winger, is a live, up-to-date man and proposes to have night classes for adults, and as a part of his educational program will use moving pictures once a week—not for the amusement of his audiences, but for their instruction in science and art and agriculture—a rare opportunity for the dissemination of practical knowledge in the hands of a man of brains and good morals.

"The Gaston school," says Dr. Ayer, "represents the realization of one of the main ideas of the schools of extension and education of the university."

It does more. It teaches the principle of community interest, the one for all and all for one idea, the fraternity of a true democracy, the aristocracy of learning, and best of all, that it is not necessary for boys and girls to leave the small town for the big city in order to have those advantages of higher culture and social life that have been too long denied to the country communities.

Gaston has set a laudable example to the Oregon towns and one that will be extensively followed as its merits become known.

This week seems to have been a pretty active one, industrially. Can't we of Springfield stir up a little enthusiasm, get busy and go after some more industries for the town? Can't we put the town on the map again?

FOR BETTER SCHOOLS

Taxpayers of Springfield took a wise step Monday when they named a citizens' committee to work with the school board in formulating a definite proposition for the improvement of the school facilities of Springfield. Not only was the step wise in itself, in that it shows a recognition of the needs of the young people of the community, but it joins the forces official with the citizens generally in moving toward a desirable end. Out of the counsel of these should come sane, constructive advice for the people as a whole, resulting in the adoption of a plan that will work out for the betterment of the schools and the advancement of the community.

The question to be settled at this time is not whether or not our fathers, or we of the older generation, had such facilities as are proposed for Springfield. The real question is, What facilities are necessary for the proper education of the children of today? The best in facilities are none too good for education makes for enlightenment and happiness and advancement and achievement in this world. There are more college men's names listed in Who's Who in America than there are in the prison lists. Education pays in reducing the prison and the poor costs.

Mr. Drury's statement that the old high school needs a new roof and a new floor reminds us of those old wooden walks in Portland that were "repaired" by the laying of new stringers and top planks.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Those exempt from examinations in all subjects at the High school are: Wanda McKinney, Edna Duryee, Mary Harding, Harold Wynd and Lynn Grandy. They have an average above ninety in all subjects for the past semester.

Thursday and Friday will be taken up with semester examinations.

About thirty new students are expected to enter High school at mid-year. We extend a hearty welcome to all.

The Business English class is the recipient of a new dictionary Beatrice Holbrook has been absent for the past week.
