them. The traps may be visited early in the morning and the slugs killed.

Cutworms—Probably the best method of handling the cutworm is by the use of the poison bran mash. It is prepared as follows: Mix well 25 pounds of bran and one pound of Paris green or white arsenic. Dissolve one or two quarts of cheap syrup in just enough water to make a crumbly mash when added to the poison bran. Do not make it thin and sloppy. Sow the poison broadcast in the evening at the rate of 15 pounds to the acre. Keep poultry away from the poison.

This mash may be used to advantage for the garden slug instead of using the poison leaf bait as given above, if desired.

Cabbage Maggot—This insect pest may be handled by screening in the plant beds to keep the adult flies from depositing eggs about the stems of the young plants, and then by placing tarred paper discs about the stems of the plants when transplanted.

The screen may consist of cheese cloth stretched over an eight to ten inch board frame placed about the beds. No openings should be left through which the adult flies can enter, or the screen will do little good.

The discs are small hexagonal pieces of tarred paper such as is used for roofing, with a slit from one corner to the center where a small star-shaped cut is made. They are inexpensive, easily applied and may be used for a number of years if properly cared for. If applied when the plants are set, they will protect from seventy-five to ninety-five per cent of the plants from the maggots, where ninety per cent, or more, of the unprotected plants would be destroyed.

Acting County Agriculturist.
