GOOD IRRIGATION GOOD, BAD IRRIGATION BAD

The aim in irrigation should be to use the least amount of irrigation necessary to maintain a favorable moisture content throughout the main part of the growing season while still permitting the soil to dry out sufficiently to mature the crop. Irrigation should be applied when the soil moisture content drops to near the wilting point and in just sufficient amount to raise the moisture content to the maximum usable water capacity of the soil throughout the root zone. Proper irrigation supplies a favorable moisture condition and encourages the growth of feeding roots, bacterial activity and the liberation of plant food. Improper irrigation checks these processes and often causes unfavorable soil temperature and drainage problems, of the leaching of plant food. In strictly arid districts it may even result in failure. Irrigation should be regarded as simply supplementary rainfall and is desirable whenever rain is desirable. Proper irrigation is a good means of soil moisture control.

Farming under irrigation reaches its highest development with intensive farming. Where large crops are removed and large amount of refuse must be used to keep up the usable water capacity and maintain fertility, irrigation makes possible a greater diversity of production. It means crop surety, closer neighbors, more shade, water for live stock and generally less dust. It compels closer co-operation.—W. L. Powers, O. A. C.

GLASS OF WATER Upset Her

People who don't know about food should never be allowed to feed persons with weak stomachs.

Sometime ago a young woman who lives in Me., had an attack of scarlet fever, and when convalescing was permitted to eat anything she wanted. Indiscriminate feeding soon put her back in bed with severe stomach and kidney trouble.

"There I stayed," she said, "three months, with my stomach in such condition that I could take only a few teaspoonfuls of milk or beef juice at a time. Finally Grape-Nuts was brought to my attention and I asked my doctor if I might eat it. He said, 'yes,' and I commenced at once.

"The food did me good from the start and I was soon out of bed and recovered from the stomach trouble. I have gained ten pounds and am able to do all household duties, some days sitting down only long enough to eat my meals. I can eat anything that one ought to eat, but I still continue to eat Grape-Nuts at breakfast and supper and like it better every day.

"Considering that I could stand only a short time, and that a glass of water seemed so heavy, I am fully satisfied that Grape-Nuts has been everything to me and that my return to health is due to it.

"I have told several friends having nervous or stomach trouble what Grape-Nuts did for me and in every case they speak highly of the food."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.
