Harry Lauder
by Walt Mason

H. Lauder is the Canny Scot, who always knows just what is what, and people say he's grown quite rich, by always knowing which is which. One thing's admitted by the bunch, which is that Lauder has the punch. Where'er he does his sprightly chores, he packs the houses to the doors; he sings his songs so passing well, the auditors stand up to yell. Withal, he is a thrifty soul; he wisely will not spend his roll, until he's sure he will not fail to get full value for his kale. That's why he always asks for "Tux" when he would spend his hard-earned bucks for 'baccy, in his pipe to puff—he knows Tuxedo is the stuff. Great men, wise men, in every land, all tell us that Tuxedo's grand.

HARRY LAUDER
World-famous Scotch Comedian, says:
"Tuxedo for mildness, for life and fragrance, THE Tuxedo for me. With me filled with good old Tuxedo, all my troubles go in smoke. In all my wide world travels I've yet to find its equal as a slow-burn, cool-tasting, sweet-flavored tobacco. TUXEDO suits me completely."
