WHERE DOES THE PUBLIC COME IN?

All America is holding its breath and watching every move between the railroads and the brotherhoods of employes. What will happen? When will it happen? What will we do if there is a strike? Are the employes justified in asking for an eight hour day? Are the railroads justified in refusing to grant an eight hour day?

Under the present conditions the trainmen get paid by the hour and their working days are just as long as their runs happen to be. If the run takes eight hours they work eight hours, if it requires eleven hours, eleven hours is the length of the day. Now the employes ask that they be granted an eight hour day with extra pay for more than eight hours. When a man does a day's work does he not deserve a little rest and recreation? If it is necessary for him to be denied this rest and recreation is it not worth a little more to him than his regular working time?

The railroads want to arbitrate. They want to arbitrate the last rights of their trainmen—the length of time they shall work. Nearly 400,000 men are standing for the same principle and they threaten to strike if they are not granted the concession. Do strikes benefit anyone? Here is what Thomas S. Adams and Helen L. Sumner have to say about strikes in their book on Labor Problems:

"Does the strike pay the workingman? The answer of the most conservative labor leaders is that it does, and they may be supposed to know their business. The strike, they point out, often drags both employers and employes from a dangerous rut and facilitates the adoption of more efficient methods of work and production. Again the morals of organized labor, the feeling of solidarity, is immeasurably stimulated, they believe, by the common conflict and the common sacrifices demanded in this conflict. 'It is difficult to overestimate the gain from a righteous labor uprising,' says John Mitchell, 'and there are few moral forces more uplifting than the strike spirit that cements a vast army of men,' more particularly they insist that strikes are necessary to impress the employer with the power of organized labor, and prepare him for peaceable collective bargaining."

This is the laborers point of view. The railroad has its way of looking at it and the public stands by and suffers the consequences of the actions of both sides. Strikes may be a good thing for the workingman, but they are poor economics for anybody. The public suffers and pays the bills. If there is a railroad strike the trainmen will lose their wages, the railroads will lose their profits. The public will lose crops, cities will have food famines and inland business will be demoralized and the millions that the public loses will be so large that the amount lost by the railroads and their employes will look small.

President Wilson has asked congress to pass legislation that will protect the public against great loss on account of a strike. This is one of the duties of congress under the police power. Let them use it.

THURSTON ITEMS

Thurston, Ore. Aug. 29.—Herbert Taylor met with a painful accident by falling on a sharp board from a high banister Monday.

Elmer Olson was slightly injured by a hayrack falling on him last week.

Mrs. Frank Shan of Eugene is visiting friends at this place.

Mrs. Anna Teeters of Cottage Grove is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Ellen Weedham.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Mitchell and family spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor Needham.

Miss Nellie Matthews of Eugene has charge of the General Merchandise store here, during the absence of Ross Matthews.

A picnic for the Junior Christian Endeavor is being planned for next Saturday. Misses Iris Rowe and Mae Harbert, superintendents of the Junior work at Thurston will be in charge of the youngsters and a good time is anticipated by all.

At a joint meeting of the Junior and Senior Christian Endeavors of Thurston, a missionary play was given. The object of the play was to awaken a more lively interest in foreign missions and to show the effect on the work done in foreign fields, of carelessness and negligence of the supporters at home. The entertainment was greatly added to by a special musical number given by Mrs. Edmiston and Mrs. Taylor, and another by Misses Helen Teachout, Laura Mitchell, Willa Edmiston and Helen Harbert members of the Junior society. After the play and music a generous collection for foreign missions was received by two little friends from China. The church was tastefully decorated with flowers of the season and filled with a large crowd of members and friends.
