The Why of Dollar Day

There is an economic waste in every individual merchant in town staging his own special sale at different times during the year. Why? Well this one merchant must take it upon himself to tell all of the people in the community of the bargains he is going to offer at a stated time. He must pay the whole cost of advertising, postage and all of the paid publicity matter that is used. This is a large item in the cost of staging a special sale. Then the buyers who want to take advantage of these good bargains must come to town each time there is a different special sale and purchase the things they want.

Just consider the saving that is made when all of the merchants in town get their heads together and stage one big sale on one day when every merchant is giving bargains to the buyers. The cost of advertising to each merchant is much smaller, and the buyers can come to town and buy a great variety of goods and save money over the regular prices. It is not necessary for the farmer to make several trips to town on bargain days and he saves the time it takes to make several trips as well as the money he would spend in paying the regular prices for merchandise.

Dollar Day is planned for the mutual benefit of the buyer as well as the seller. The merchant wants the dollars and the buyer wants the bargains. There is always an effort made to please the customers and there is no pretense at trying to hoodwink the public.
