'BIRD OF PARADISE' AGAIN
This Unusual Hawaiian Play to Appear at the Eugene Theatre.

"The Bird of Paradise" returns to Eugene on February 13th. December one of the most interesting novelties of this or any other season, is Richard Walton Tully's drama, "The Bird of Paradise," which will be seen for the third time at the Eugene theatre on Tuesday evening, February 13.

The theme of the play is the degeneration of one race when brought into close relationship with an inferior civilization. Paul Wilson, graduate of an American medical school, filled with zeal to discover a germ to stamp out leprosy, meets Launa, a Hawaiian princess, whose weds, forsakes his mission, and sinks to the level of the natives.

A beach-comber is regenerated by an American girl, takes the doctor's place, accomplishes what the doctor set out to do and becomes an alert business man. After two years Dr. Wilson casts off his native wife, and returns to America. She, believing the prayer of death has been invoked upon her by a native priest, offers herself as a human sacrifice to the goddess of the volcano, "Pele" and plunges into the crater.

The cast this season is headed by Miss Olin Field, in the sympathetic role of Launa. The band of native Hawaiians in their songs and melodies is a feature.
