Harvard Boys Decide Just What She Should Be. The "Round Table Boys," members of the graduate school at Harvard, got together recently and agreed on the "girl that's worth while" as follows: She is attractive, graceful and healthy, but not necessarily pretty. She can dress tastefully and entertain any one and make him feel at ease. She can make bread as well as fudge and cake as well as a rarebit. She is appreciative of the dance and of the sports. She is broad minded, sympathetic, tactful, unselfish, optimistic, thrifty, of good disposition and moderate in all things. She can stand reverses without worry. She is gentle to children and kind to older people, especially her parents. She has a broad education, but not necessarily a college one. She is modest and true and home loving. She has good social standing, is of a religious nature and is not too proud to pray.

SLEW BROTHERS TO GET THRONE

Theebaw, Indian King, Ruled by Terror.

WOMAN'S EVIL INFLUENCE

Completely Governing Him, She Was Instigator of Machinations Which Led to His Enthronement—Reign of Terror Followed Until Ruler Was Exiled by British.

The recent death of Theebaw, once an Indian king, recalls memories of the horrors of his rule and the overthrow of his dynasty and the British annexation of upper Burma thirty-one years ago, says the London Times. He was one of the junior members of a large family of sons and daughters of King Mindoon, who ruled Ava despotically but on the whole prosperously for twenty-six years. After undergoing the usual novitiate in a Buddhist monastery he became, with three of his brothers, a pupil of the late Dr. J. E. Marks, who built a school and church at Mandalay almost entirely at the cost of the king. Dr. Marks often testified to the engaging and kindly qualities and bookish tastes of the youth, who soon afterward under the influence of a woman allowed terrible atrocities to be committed.

Rivals Clubbed to Death.

When King Mindoon was dying, at the close of 1875, the queen of the Middle palace determined to assure succession to Theebaw, who was in love with her daughter, Supaya-Lat, and his weakness of character insured for her great power. He gained by various stratagems the support of ministers, and all possible rivals to the throne, who were summoned to visit the dying king, were imprisoned. Theebaw was declared the successor, and within five months of his accession he had his captive brothers and sisters clubbed to death. They were thrown—some of them—when still only stunned by the blows of the executioners into a huge trench, which was covered with earth and afterward trampled level by elephants.

Supaya-Lat ousted her eldest sister from the position of chief queen and by virtue of stronger will completely dominated the king. The rapacity of the court set the example to the whole hierarchy of officials; extreme disorder prevailed throughout the country; diplomatic relations with Great Britain were broken off, and ultimately, at the end of 1885, there was issued an ultimatum, which was contemptuously treated by the king and his ministers.

Theebaw Surrenders.

An expedition was sent, and it swiftly fulfilled its purpose. Nov. 28, 1885, King Theebaw abjectly surrendered to the late General Harry Prendergast. In vain he pleaded for three months, then three weeks, then for three days in which to prepare for exile; the general, recognizing that delay of a single moment might be dangerous, gave him and his chief queens, by whom he was accompanied, only ten minutes to get ready to depart in a waiting steamer. He was afterward sent direct to Rangoon, on the Kolkun coast of western India. There the exiled king spent the last thirty years of his life in slothful contentment and ease. Queen Supaya-Lat retained her hold upon him until her death, and the last of his queens died some four and a half years ago.
