Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; ninetenths out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio. TO THE PUBLIC The undersigned has been in the laundry business in Springfield for the past six years, during which time I have tried to do good work and please my patrons. On account of the strenuous times of the past year when it has been necessary for all of us to economize I was forced to close down my plant last spring, since which time I have been trying to accommodate my trade by taking the work to Eugene.

Next month I expect to open up again in a room on Main street between Second and Third streets where I will be better prepared than ever to please my patrons. I now appeal to you to patronize home industry by keeping your work in Springfield. We will meet competition in every way. We make a specialty of family washing, 30 pounds for 75 cents. Thanking you for past favors I remain, Yours truly, J. W. BAKER.

Captain Sims Tells Congress Committee British Navy Must Not Scatter. Fortifications at Panama Canal Simply an Aid to Fleet, Foot Loose For Limited Time.

Washington—When a light squadron of German warships slipped through the British patrol and bombarded the Kentish coast it puzzled many observers, including some members of the house committee on naval affairs, that vessels from a blockaded navy can make these raids. Testifying recently before the house committee, Captain William S. Sims said: "There is no possibility of disposing of the British fleet, even if it were four times as great, so as to prevent a raiding force attacking an unprotected part of the coast for half an hour and then running away again. If the Germans had nothing but three battle cruisers they would be able to carry out such raids. It would be possible to dispose of the British fleet around the coast so that it would be extremely dangerous to do so, but as the British fleet must be kept concentrated for battle in case the German fleet does come out, such a course would be suicidal.

"Suppose the vessels of the British fleet were stationed so many miles apart around the coast, it would be easy for a force only half as great to come out and destroy them one at a time, because they would be at such a considerable distance apart that they could not support each other.

"As to why the British fleet has not bombarded the unfortified coast of Germany, I do not think that the government of Great Britain will consent to bombarding practically defenseless towns. To make attacks with the fleet against Heligoland or other fortified places is impracticable. No ships can come within the range of land defenses, because they could not do any damage to the shore guns and the shore guns would sink the ships.

"There are no fortifications that you could put there that would protect the Panama canal," said Captain Sims. "They simply are an aid to the fleet, and they leave our fleet foot loose for a certain limited time. The canal is safe for a certain length of time against attacks, because it could only be operated against by landing outside of the area of fortifications and attacked by land. In order to do that they would have to bring over an expedition and protect that expedition while it landed. They could not and would not do that if we had a superior force on the sea."
