The "Deserted Cabin" was Filled to Capacity

Wolby Stevens, Mark Perry, and Dr. W. C. Foster, the latter from Portland, returned Tuesday from a two weeks' hunting trip in the hills twenty-five miles east of Oakridge. It is reported they had a fairly successful hunt and a real nice time—with the exception of one incident which at the time may have seemed slightly untoward. While on their way in for the hunting ground, so the story goes, they were directed to what was believed to be an abandoned road camp in which they could stop over night. They reached the cabin, took possession, and had cooked their dinner, when a homesteader appeared on the scene and claimed the camp as his castle, and further wrathfully declared his intent to oust the interlopers p. q. Had there been but one of the trespassers, he would have very likely made good his threat; and possibly he could have handled two of them—for he was very large and largely mad—but the three managed to stand him off long enough to finish their dinner, when they hiked out in search of quieter quarters.

Farmers' Prices and Manufacturers' Prices

David F. Houston, secretary of agriculture, does not assent to the theory that the prices of farm products should fall before the prices of manufactured commodities fall. He makes this clear in replying to a recent communication in which it was stated that "There must be a drop in prices before there is a drop in wages, and it would seem that the farmer is the man who is going to be first hit."

This theory has been advanced by a number of manufacturers, said the secretary, who continued, "It is clearly an unjust contention. It manifestly would not do to ask farmers to produce, buying everything that they have to buy from manufacturers at high prices, with the assurance to them that their products will fall in price, and that then manufacturers will consider what they will do with reference to their own prices. Obviously, manufacturers must be willing to make at least a contemporaneous decrease in their prices. It might even be contended that they should make a prior decrease in their prices, since the farmer's operations involve a year and he could not recoup at all, because on the theory put forth, his products would fall in price. It seems to me that business men must be brought to realize that if we are to get back to the normal they must set about immediately to do their part, and unquestionably profiting in manufactured products must be eliminated.

"Of course, everything possible will be done to enable the farmer to produce more economically, so that if prices do fall he will not sustain a loss, or so great a loss. All the efforts of the department of agriculture and of the land-grant colleges have this aim. They are trying to bring about methods of cultivation, better financing, better marketing, the elimination of plant and animal diseases and insect pests, and the better utilization of labor. Much has been done in this direction and more will be done as time passes."
