PYORRHEA

"Doctor, can you cure pyorrhea? Is there anything I can do for my gums?" I will answer yes to each question, but with reservations.

First, let me answer the question, What is pyorrhea? Pyorrhea is an affliction of the roots of the teeth and surrounding tissue which is accompanied by an exudation of pus. This is not a scientific definition of pyorrhea, but one which perhaps will be better understood. There are several stages of pyorrhea, beginning with a simple redness or inflammation of the gums, not on all teeth, but as a rule on the lower front teeth. This inflammation is caused in nine cases out of ten by deposits of tartar under the edge of the gums which CANNOT BE REMOVED WITH A BRUSH. The tartar accumulates, causing greater irritation. The gums begin to recede from the teeth. Infection sets in. Pus results. Now the trouble really starts. After the pus begins to be formed it grows very rapidly, taking tissue, bone and all before it. It absolutely must be taken care of or loss of the teeth is the result. If loss of the teeth were the only result, we could right well be thankful. However, it goes farther. The pus from these teeth is swallowed with the food and saliva, where it goes to the stomach and intestines to carry on its devastation. It is absorbed into the system a little at a time—gradually but surely destroying the resistance. There comes a day when you no longer feel natural—you are nervous and sullen, with more or less fever. You are now the most susceptible to any disease which is prevalent. But directly traceable to this condition known as pyorrhea are various forms of catarrh, tonsillitis, gastritis, enteritis, rheumatism, gout, etc.

PYORRHEA CAN BE CURED if you will come to me before it has progressed to far—that is, before the teeth are ready to fall out. No doubt you have read advertisements for cure of pyorrhea by medicinal use alone, but they are NOT TRUE. You had better give your money to some charitable cause, for you will get far better results. Here is the point, whether the tartar on your teeth is the cause or a result of pyorrhea, I can definitely prove to you that by its removal and further treatment your pyorrhea will disappear.

If you have been told you can not be cured, see me before having your teeth extracted. A consultation will not cost you anything.
