SHELL CROWNS

Gold crowns, or caps, as they are often called, are occasionally (rarely) useful in some bridge work where the benefits derived will overcome the bad qualities, also in retaining some forms of removable appliances. It is at the best a choice between two evils.

The gold crown is absolutely the last resort in a conscientious endeavor to restore a tooth or teeth. The cap, as it is called, is the poorest of all mechanical contrivances placed in the mouth. It is so because there are few dentists who take the time for proper construction and see that it fits perfectly under the gum margin. It is bad because with all precautions it will not maintain its fit; under stress of mastication even though correctly made and perfectly fitted. It is bad because the enlarged band will harbor food and infection which becomes putrescent, giving a bad taste and foul breath. It is bad because some dentists cannot get above commercialism and give you the benefit of what is yours by right and what they know to be true. I say this because there are men who will cover up your defective tooth without proper care. It will irritate the gums and cause gingivitis. It is an indirect cause of PYORRHEA. It is an unsightly affliction to wish upon any person irregardless of their attitude.

The average case in which a gold crown is placed is entirely uncalled for, because it can be properly repaired by means of a filling material such as amalgam or gold inlay, either of which is far superior.

Here is the cause of this article. A great many people believe that a gold crown gives strength to the tooth. A house is no better than the foundation upon which it rests, and so with a tooth. To properly place a crown requires the destruction of considerable tooth structure, if not already destroyed by caries. This added destruction, of course, is an absolute necessity for proper fitting of a crown. It weakens the tooth base and the crown does not repair the damage.

There is unfortunately a class of commercial dentists who place a gold crown on every tooth which has a cavity either large, small or indifferent. Commercialism without conscience or regret—the man who places a few dollars before your welfare or who will try to make you believe you are receiving true professional service.

People, if gold is indicated or necessary, a gold inlay can be placed in any position or on any tooth which can be ruined by a gold crown. It can be done better because it requires less destruction of the tooth. It is more durable and sanitary. It looks better. It does not have any surplus band to irritate the gums and harbor putrescent food debris. It does not cause gingivitis nor PYORRHEA. Why? Because it gives you an exact reproduction of the tooth as nature intended and is not a hood, cover or cap of surplus material.

There are a lot of people who agree with me and some who do not. Have you a gold crown? The chances are favorable that you have. Do you have a bad taste in your mouth sometimes and wonder why? Go to the mirror and see if your gums are red or blue above the crown. Take a toothpick and carefully insert under the gum to the edge of your crown and see how much of an edge stands out. If your crown is all right, you will not find this evidence. Go look right now.

Now, kind people, I am not asking you to have all of these crowns removed; far be it from such. If they do not bother you too much, for heaven's sake leave them alone and keep them clean the best you can.

What I want and implore of you is to demand modern dentistry when you go to your dentist.

I will make you an amalgam restoration of your tooth for less money than you pay for a gold crown. I will make you a gold inlay for approximately the same price as you pay for most crowns.

People, you are entitled to the best the profession has to offer and you do not have to leave your home town to get it.

Examinations free.

Very truly yours,

DR. S. RALPH DIPPEL
