the price of their products, while the teachers who were not called by the government for other work, stood by their jobs 'loyally and' uncomplainingly.

"They did not strike or loaf on the job; they did not picket the school buildings or burn them down; they refrained from shooting their superintendents and school boards. During all this time there was scarcely a branch of the government which did not call on the schools for specific war work. They responded wholeheartedly, effectively, and as a reward, teachers had their wages reduced about 50 per cent—that is to say, in purchasing power.

"Not a single shipyard, street railway, bank, mine, hospital, laundry, theatre, that could have continued to do business during the war without vast increase in wages. Yet there is scarcely a school system in America that pays its teachers, in purchasing power, three fourths as much as it paid them five years ago. There are hundreds of college faculties who are daily facing increases in living expenses more than five times as great as the increases in their pay. The wonder is not that the morale of the schools and colleges has suffered; the wonder is that they have gone on at all. I am not sure but what the explanation is found in a professional spirit higher than that, at the present time, of any large group of workers in the world."
