NEWSPAPERS HELP COLLEGE EXPOSE FRAUD

Sale of low grade arsenical sprays in Oregon has been checked by publicity given by the chemistry department of the college experiment station through the state and county newspapers. Immense damage by burning of fruit and foliage was caused by use of low grade arsenical mixtures in the beginning. The station proved the possibility of better material, manufacturers brought out a better product, and growers who misuse spray save enormous sums every year as a result. Fear of station discovery and newspaper publicity gives the low-grade dealer little chance to do business in Oregon.

Springfield Creamery

The most permanently prosperous sections of our country have been those where factory and farm cooperate in production and marketing. The small fruit and vegetable canner sections are where the farm houses are painted and land is high. Those sections employ the largest number of people to the square mile and have the largest bank deposits.

She States It Mildly.

While suffering with a severe attack of the grip and threatened with pneumonia, Mrs. Annie H. Cooley, of Middlefield, Conn., began using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and was very much benefited by its use. The pains in the chest soon disappeared, the cough became loose, expectoration easy and in a short time she was as well as ever. Mrs. Cooley says she cannot speak too highly in praise of this remedy.

LYE KILLS ORCHARD TREE MOSS

Lye, a pound can dissolved in six or seven gallons of water or lime-sulfur spray used for scale, will rid orchard trees of moss and lichens to very great advantage. Western Oregon orchards not sprayed with such sprays as lime-sulfur and bordeaux, develop a coating of these unsightly growths, says W. A. Smart, O. A. C. crop pest assistant. His investigations show that while most fungicidal sprays kill these growths, lye seems to cause a quicker breaking up and weathering away. It must be applied before the winter buds begin to open to avoid injury to the tender leaves.
