Good Roads Spell Progress

In explaining the proposed constitutional amendment raising the state bonding limit from two to four per cent, Nelson Roney, of Eugene, makes the following statement:

"This amendment requires no additional taxation whatever.

As soon as the people realize that their property will not be taxed but that instead a possible levy, in the event of the measure failing to pass when it is voted upon, May 21, may be made, they will vote for the measure.

The gasoline tax and automobile license fees are sufficient to pay interest upon and retire all the bonds without their being increased. Those owning machines will be benefited without additional cost and those without machines will be benefited without any cost whatever. The present funds have been exhausted or contracted for but road-building must not cease.

"We want roads regardless of the fact that good roads cost much money to construct. We want our taxes to be less, if possible. We can't have good roads without increasing our taxes greatly if we construct them without government aid," writes Jay W. Dunn, one of the commissioners of Lincoln County. Mr. Dunn then analyzes the possibilities which might occur should the proposed road-lending amendment carry.

"I am wholly in accord with the effort now making through legislative action to further the Good Roads movement within our state," writes William F. Woodward, of Portland. "It is simply a means of realizing and securing to the people of this state assets hitherto unused and unavailable: products of field, forest and mine lie dormant until they can be made profitable and useful through the medium of well constructed roads. And if there are no other resources than taxation to meet the cost of these roads, we would still be in favor of them, but when the construction of these highways is carried out by means of an impost which in no sense can be called a burden, and is almost wholly received through channels hitherto untouched, there can be, in our estimation, not one word against the measure.
