MUCH WATER IS USED UP GROWING ACRE OF CORN

Lacking Rains and Irrigation, Farmers Must Force Plants to Draw Their Own Moisture.

O. A. C. Experiment Station, Corvallis, May 10.—It takes 558 tons of water—134,000 gallons—to grow a ton of dry matter in crops. This was the average of six trials over a period of three years on the station farm, reports W. L. Powers.

To supply this water requires 4.93 inches spread over one acre of land—practically 5 acre inches. This is the "water cost" of an acre of dry fodder corn. Since most of the corn is grown with but little rain—sometimes none at all—and much of it without irrigation, the Oregon corn crop must depend chiefly on soil moisture for its water requirement.

It takes good farming to make the soil retain this heavy water supply through the season, and to cause the corn roots to go down after it. The soil must drain properly and be kept porous by introduction of organic matter and by proper tillage.

Legumes, crop rotations and livestock are used on the station farm as important measures in keeping the soil in right condition and fertility to store and hold the 558 tons of water used in making a ton of dry fodder, or other useful crop.

system for Lane county. From this fund we are paying for our advertising, from these funds our secretary, Mr. B. Glass and our stenographer, Mr. Green receive a salary. Other than these two, everyone connected with this campaign is devoting his services free.

"No doubt you are giving your time and expense, freely, in opposing the bond program. We are just as freely giving ours in working for the bond program. Our books showing every cent received and every cent expended are open for inspection. Gentlemen, you are eligible to join the Lane County Good Roads association. Send in your dollar or more if you are so inclined and I will send you a membership card and button and enroll your name in great big letters on our membership records. Permit me to say in advance that this money will be used for advertising purposes, under the slogan "Good Roads, Good Sense, Good Markets, Less Expense."
