MEETING MONDAY NIGHT IS SUCCESS

Merchants and Members of the 4-Ls Hold Discussion and Social Hour

One of the most beneficial events in the history of Springfield was accomplished when the business men and members of the Loyal Legion of Loggers and Lumbermen met in the Loyal Legion Hall, Monday evening Jan. 3rd to partake of a banquet, become better acquainted—discuss and adjust matters pertaining to each other's welfare.

Mr. Geo. Davenport, Chairman, informed the gathering that the success of the Loyal Legion Organization had been accomplished through co-operation between the employer and employee on a 50-50 basis and as present conditions throughout the United States demand stabilization to insure our future prosperity they believed as a solution of the present conditions and in view of the fact that it was now necessary that labor sustain a reduction they had taken these means to present these facts and solicit the co-operation of the business men, in equalizing these necessary changes.

Messrs. Bressler, Swartz, Rosenstein, Lyons, Laxton and Gray, on behalf of the business men stated that they realized, as everybody else, the necessity of stabilization of business and expressed their desire of co-operation to attain this end. Seeing in the Loyal Legion the satisfactory and just solution of all industrial and social matters they believed that frequent "get-together" meetings of this kind, especially between the merchants, would create an association which would be of mutual benefit to each other and the community in general.

Both the merchant and the wage earner have their troubles and meetings of this kind afford the opportunity to understand each other and adjust matters through co-operation, as was shown by the general discussion of statistics and opinions locally and throughout the country and every one left the meeting with the firm conviction that as soon as this "reconstruction period," (which we have been nervously anticipating for the past two years) is over we will enter an era of prosperity better than we ever had.

BILLION DOLLAR STUFF

American women last year spent $750,000,000 on perfumes, rouge, face powder, and cosmetics, according to luxury tax returns. That is $1300 a minute, night and day. Meanwhile men sent up in cigar and cigarette smoke the magnificent sum of $1,310,000,000 or nearly six hundred million more in making themselves smelly than the women did in counteracting the general odoriferous effect by making themselves fragrant.

Seems heedless extravagance. Yet after all, who would want his women-folk to be less alluring? If it takes two million dollars a day in mysterious blandishments, why it's cheap at the price. Or pipe the tobacco bill. A smoke is a mighty comfortable thing an excellent companion to add to a crowd, or an equally excellent friend for the hours of loneliness. Both smokes and cosmetics are masculine extravagances. True, the men don't buy the latter—extensively. But they are bought for the men, so it really amounts to the same thing.

Both the extravagance. The only things that bring a sense of downright satisfaction are the things flavored with a little speck of devilment—not too much. A life which is entirely surrounded by substantial meat and potatoes, good durable clothing, and other sheer necessities is pretty dreary. We our extravagancies that make the old world a bit brighter and a trifle more tolerable as a place of abode. So we pull over these figures without a whimper:

Candy, a billion dollars; automobiles, two billion; "luxurious services" three billion; pleasure resorts, three billion; "luxurious food", five billion. Our grand total luxury bill last year was $22,700,000,000. This is an average of $216.00 for every man, woman and child in the nation, and prompts us to rise and remark that we have a personal luxury credit coming to us for the next year, of approximately $21.87.

A STRIKE OF CIRCUMSTANCE

Statistics of the Bureau of Labor show that at the present time unemployment is on the increase in the United States. A few basic industries are putting on more men, but most of them are laying off. Not yet has the unemployment problem assumed alarming proportions. A few of the less hopeful are predicting bread lines in large cities, and a come-back of the hobo and the panhandler who have been among those absent for many moons. Mostly there is a tone of cheerful optimism about a hoped-for return to full swing after the first of the year. The fact is that if anyone knows exactly what is to happen this winter, that individual is keeping religiously silent. Most of us are just guessing. Of course if there is a full tide of employment the more populous East will be harder hit than the West. But we shall all feel it.

Unemployment is no new problem. It has occurred before. Attention may be directed to the fact that a wave of employment has the same basic economic effect as a strike wave. It means several million potential producers who are not producing; millions of dollars of economic loss, for which all have to pay. In effect we have a strike—a strike of circumstance. For of course the amount of deliberate shutting down of industrial plants is negligible. It costs the managers, owners and operators too much money. The shut down is heartily regretted by all present.

But should we stand idly by, generation after generation, because it is a strike of circumstances, and allow the deadly specter of unemployment to be always in the offing? It is reasonable to suppose that intelligent human beings can uncover a solution, if that intelligence is applied. It is a proper function of government, (an only federal government could function effectively) to attack the problem, study causes of unemployment, and erect machinery for its prevention. It does not speak well for us that we allow unemployment to fasten itself on the county, and then make a few haphazard attempts at merely palliative remedy.

Congress once turned down an appropriation for the study of the unemployment problem. Maybe if citizens exercised their influence, we could cause Congress to see that it has a proper duty in regard to the same.
