REGULATE THE HUNTERS

In the early days of the hunting season, a man with a dangerous gun in his hands may reasonably calculate that there are more men than deer in the woods; so that if such a one sees a movement in the bushes, and he thinks there must be a living object there, it is rather more likely that it is a man than that it is a deer. But even if it happens to be a deer, the chances are against its being a buck; for there are more does than bucks in the woods; so the chances are at least five to one that if he hits a living object, as he expects to do, he has violated the law, and will be punished. Even if it happens to be neither a deer nor a man, it may be a cow or a colt or some other animal which somebody owns and may set considerable store by; and the hunter or his father may be called upon to pay a good round price for it.

But the trouble is, these man slayers do not "calculate" or "remember". About the only thinking they do in these tragic cases is expressed in what is coming to be a familiar formula: "I thought it might be a deer."

How would this do as an amendment to the hunting laws? Allow none but certain responsible bonded county officers to issue licenses, and require each applicant, at least on the first issue, to pass an examination to determine whether he is a fit person to be trusted with a loaded gun. A gun, in the hands of an inexperienced or reckless or unreliable person, is almost as dangerous as an automobile and it would seem that the use of it ought to be subject to almost as strict regulations.

The opening of a short hunting season, after a long period of prohibition, sets every excitable man with a craving to kill something, a craving for adventure or even a craving for an unrestricted ramble half wild. To give every such man or boy who can pay the fee a hunting license, and turn him loose in the woods when the woods are full of men all bent on getting the first chance at a deer, is but little short of criminal proceeding on the part of all who in any way contribute to the bringing about of such a state of things. Let us narrow down and locate the responsibility for all this killing.

We noted, about a month ago, the visit of Chas. Mills and his son Leo to the elder Mill's sister, at Creswell, and his nephew, Fred Louk, and family here. Mr. Mills had had his leg broken about two months before, somewhere in southwestern Washington. Word has lately come from them that when they had gotten as far as Kellogg, Idaho, on their journey, the son had a leg broken in an automobile collision. They appear to have been especially unfortunate in their ramblings.

But after a faithful effort, he found it was a losing business and was unwilling to stand the loss any longer. They have stored their plant, and some one may find a place for it.

I had another attack of the same complaint three or four years ago and a few doses of this remedy cured me. I have recommended it to dozens of people since I first used it and shall continue to do so for I know it is a quick and positive cure for bowel troubles."

"In Every Respect" says the Good Judge

You get more genuine chewing satisfaction from the Real Tobacco Chew than you ever got from the ordinary kind.

The good tobacco taste lasts so long—a small chew of this class of tobacco lasts much longer than a big chew of the old kind. That's why it costs less to use.

Any man who has used both kinds will tell you that.
