To the Readers of The News—

The News comes to you this week in an altered form. Not quite so much space, but all printed at home, and pages enlarged. This gives us full control of more space, and enables us to take better care of both reading matter and advertising. In making this change, we are testifying to our faith in the coming enlargement of Springfield's material interests, and preparing to bear our part in promoting those interests. We ask you to join hands with us.

Those who were here soon after the branch line was built into Springfield will remember when the Southern Pacific had an agent at Springfield Junction, with his office in a box car. That was succeeded by a nice little rest cottage, "an' no body livin' in it". Those who have lived here through both these periods, and will keep on living here, will doubtless see a good station at Springfield Junction, with a day and night operator.

There are 213,435 farms in Iowa, and there 177,558 automobiles on these farms.

HENRY FORD'S RAILROAD

Henry Ford is a man who has gotten immensely rich by "making every edge cut". There are other men who have tried that, but Ford seems to be able to find more cutting edges to a business undertaking than most of the others. Recently he found a railroad on a bargain counter, and bought it. He expected to use it mostly in hauling his own freight. When he ordered a lot of material to be used in some of his factories, he could haul it over his own railroad; and he could reasonably calculate on getting it delivered before the season for that kind of manufactured goods was over. He put the road in good running order; and, according to his usual custom, paid the men employed on it higher wages than they had ever been paid before. The road began to prosper, for he saw to it that it had plenty of business. Then he saw how he could make another edge cut. He reduced the freight rate on his own railroad, so that he could get his own material hauled more cheaply, and thus make money on his railroad in two ways instead of one.

That was working so well, and he was getting rich off himself so fast that way that he decided to make another freight reduction. Then he ran against a snag. Most of his railroad was in the state of Ohio, but a little of one end of it stuck over into the state of Michigan. That brought it under the jurisdiction of the interstate commerce commission. The commission informed him that he must not do that any more without its consent.

THE SPEED COP

Fred Knox, of this city, is now speed officer on the Eugene police force. He has bought a new Harley-Davidson motorcycle for use in that service. You see, if a man violates the law and offends against the proprieties by going too fast, a speed cop, if he is to be good for anything, must be able to go a little faster. So if a speed maniac is going down, or up, the street at the top of his speed, and a speed cop is after him at a little higher speed, the unofficial and undistinguished citizens and the children and the dogs may get out of the way if they can. We must not allow the law to be broken, if we have to break everything else in town. Things in Springfield have been running "in low" for a good while. We must be getting ready for the time when this town will have a speed cop.

WALNUT GRADES ESTABLISHED

The walnut industry of Oregon is reaching such proportions that it is becoming necessary to develop new markets and establish new grades. Nearly 50 prominent growers of the Willamette valley attended a meeting at the offices of the Oregon Growers Cooperative association to decide on grades to be followed in marketing walnuts this year.

Walnuts will be sold under the Mistland brand as Jumbo, grafted, No. 1 and No. 2 grades. The association is preparing to install equipment for washing the nuts in several of its Willamette valley plants and it is expected that all of the crop will be assembled in a central plant for grading and packing.

Oregon walnuts are superior to those produced in California and buyers who know the merits of nuts from the two sections stand ready to give 2 cents a pound more for the Oregon product, regardless of what the opening prices on the California crop may be. The Franquette is of special excellence and is the most widely known grafted variety in the state. It comprises nearly 90 per cent of the acreage of grafted English walnuts in Oregon. With a bumper crop of nuts on old trees and a large acreage of young groves just coming into bearing this year, it is expected that the yield will be much greater than that of any previous season.

TOWN AND VICINITY

"The Penalty," a drama of revenge that blazes molten steel. Would you soul for a sound body? Lon Chaney in "The Penalty," at Bell, Saturday, Oct. 1st.

T. J. Sweeney of Thurston is this week moving to the Cloverdale farm near Goshen.

As reported in the Eugene Guard of Saturday evening, R. F. Russell denies all the charges contained in the grand jury's report as to the conditions at the county home. It is explained that the report was not meant to demand a change in the superintendent, but only in some of the methods of conducting the institution, and that it was not meant to place the blame wholly on the superintendent.

"The Penalty," it pictures the underworld and upper crust of San Francisco, with intensely realistic atmosphere. Bell, Saturday.

Ira Bidwell was down from Marcola for a day or two the firsts of the week. He is tending donkey in one of the Fischer Bros. logging camps.

Phillip Gossler, of Marcola, formerly of Springfield, has been in town on business for a day or two this week.

OREGON WHEAT WINS

That hard federation wheat, bred by the college experiment station and grown by Herbert Egbert, Wasco county farmer, from seed supplied by the branch station at Moro, won the grand sweepstakes prize at the Western Grain and Hay show, Pendleton, has been reported by Paul V. Maris, extension director. The college bred wheat was showed in competition with 200 picked varieties from fifty western states. In addition it won five highest prizes in common white wheat classes. It was bred by D. E. Stephens from an Australian wheat imported some years ago, and selected with a view to meet dry farm conditions in the northwest. Competition at the show, which was a conspicious feature of the big "Round-up," was very keen, and the victory for the stamion wheat is said to be decisive.

Say what you will about the druggists offering something "just as good" because it pays a better profit, the fact still stands that ninety nine out of a hundred druggists recommend Chamberlain's Colic and Diarrhoea Remedy, when the best medicine for diarrhoea is asked for, and do so because they know from what their customers say of it, that it can be depended upon.
