An autoist was fined in Eugene last week for out speeding a fire truck. It looks as though the driver of the fire truck was the one who ought to have been fined.

Many a man who has gone out into the woods since last Saturday has been called "a bird" in his native haunts, but so far none of them has been reported mistaken for a China pheasant and shot.

In the report of the Brumfield trial, last Thursday, it was said that when a bottle of blood, supposed to be Dennis Russell's was exhibited in court, "the court room was visibly moved by the sight," but Dr. Brumfield was not. The report does not state how much the court room was moved. We hope not enough to render the building unsafe.

An Iowa bull attacked an automobile and wrecked it, and was somewhat damaged himself. It was claimed in his defense, not by the bull, but by some of his friends, that he was intoxicated at the time. The specification was that he was "under the influence of fermented silo fodder". Wonder if that could be the same stuff that some of the men used to get drunk on in the pioneer days? They called it "corn juice" then.

BROADLY INCLUSIVE

Wm. Sproule, president, and several minor officials of the Southern Pacific, on a tour of inspection, halted for a few hours in Eugene last Saturday. Some thoughts of Mr. Sproule, expressed in an interview there, the Register neatly dresses up in this garb, ready made in Eugene, after the old familiar pattern:

"This same factor of overhead and restricted income has caused the temporary abandonment of any plans the Southern Pacific has had for installation of any improvements or additions to the Eugene property of the railroad, including the Natron cut-off and new shops at Springfield."

"Including," also, perhaps, the Booth-Kelly sawmill, the new high school building and the postoffice on 4th street, which is such an object of interest just now, perhaps also including Crater Lake, Mount Shasta and a few outlying possessions.

evidence offered by the prosecution in the Brumfield trial last week, seemed all along to foreshadow a conviction, one thing that would, on any ordinary occasion, tend to weaken the state's case in the mind of an unsophisticated observer was the extraordinarily precise information that some of its witnesses were able to give, and the preternatural foresight some of them had shown in taking great pains to make sure that the testimony they did not know they were going to give, in a trial which they did not know was to come off, months in the future, should be exact and unimpeachable. Some of the indentifications of very slight and almost undistinguishable fragments were almost as positive as those of the persons who did not see Dr. Brumfield careening up and down the highways in all directions at all times of the day or night and in all sorts of vehicles.

THROWING WEALTH INTO VESUVIUS

If all the men, women and children in the United States could hurry by the seething crater of Mount Vesuvius at the rate of three persons a second, and if each cast into its all-devouring depths a five dollar gold piece, and continued to do so day and night for a year, the money thus destroyed would nearly equal our 1920 fire waste of over $500,000,000. If, in addition, about every half hour, one of this rushing throng—usually a woman or child—should fall into that sea of molten lava the 15,000 lives lost annually in this manner would approximate America's estimated fatalities by fires each year. Does it not seem incredible that any nation should allow such devastation to continue unchecked?

Every effort must be made, therefore, to acquaint the public with the magnitude of the fire destruction and the necessity for guarding against the common fire hazards. While carelessness is considered to be the chief cause of our huge fire waste, ignorance is also a large factor and consequently the importance of education in fire prevention can not be over-emphasized.—Safeguarding America Against Fire.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE BUDGET COMMITTEE:

Having been requested to make a statement in favor of a sufficient appropriation for our library to enable its board to keep it open from seven to nine each week-day evening and on Saturday afternoons, I shall take advantage of the convenience and publicity afforded by the columns of The Springfield News.

I believe that the committee is composed of substantial and representative men who are striving to see that all proper city activities shall receive a fair share of the taxes collected; but there is a possibility that, in their desire to keep down the levy they may overlook the importance for future growth of a more usable library. Nearly everyone I have interviewed on the subject, both property owners and newcomers, has shown a desire to help the library by contributions and cash, provided, it be made more available for workers, strangers and our own high school students.

People are coming here from towns no larger than ours where libraries are open every evening are bound to get the idea that we are too slow, and will prefer to live in Eugene; and just now when every progressive community of the west is making special effort to attract settlers from the crop failure regions of the middle-west, we too will be given the "once-over" by hundreds of them, but what good will that do us unless we can show them that we have a desirable place for them to locate?

Springfield entertains high hopes of being a trade center for a large part of eastern Oregon when that region becomes more accessible by way of the McKenzie and Willamette highways, but again we shall be disappointed if, when they come to trade and pass a day or a night with us, they find Eugene a more convenient stopping place.

There is such a thing as being far sighted and reaping the benefits for being so, and I may say in conclusion that the property owners of Springfield owe it to themselves to begin now to lay the foundations for a growing and progressive city; then when the easterners come by the thousands to the Portland Exposition or to find a new home we will be able to convince them that this is really a fine location and that we ourselves have faith in it; then our property valuation will double, and the same levy

How Better Than Pills?

The question has been asked—In what way are Chamberlain's Tablets superior to the ordinary cathartic and liver pills? Our answer is, they are easier and more pleasant to take and their effect is so gentle that one hardly realizes that it is produced by a medicine. Then, they not only move the bowels but improve the appetite and strengthen the digestion.
