We have dealt some in spring poetry of late. We are presenting this week a short poem of another class. It came to us anonymously; but we felt justified in publishing it, for we feel sure that it does no one any injustice. There is at least as much truth as poetry in it; and the poetry is good enough in quality, though not very great in quantity.

Can You Beat It?

One bright day in the middle of the night
Two dead men came up to fight;
A blind man came to see fair play,
And a deaf man to hear what they had to say.
A paralyzed monk came strolling by,
And hit the blind man square in the eye.
They all jumped over a ten foot wall
Into a dry ditch that drowned them all.
Poor Miss McKenzie! She can't talk

Pupil: "I don't think I should get zero on this paper."
Teacher: "I don't either, but that's the lowest I could give you."

Wonder what's the matter with Eileen. Did Marion get away with Herbert while she was at Thurston?

My, but we have some young students in Spanish II class. When Mabel R. was asked how old she was, she said "dos", which means two. Maybe she don't know how to say twenty.

May says there is one consolation about it anyway. She can wear her prize and nobody will know it unless they get too close, of course. It looks nice and smells nice, now what is it?

She stood before her mirror
With eyes closed very tight,
And tried to see just how she looked,
When fast asleep at night!

First Girl: "How was it you didn't have a nice time boating, yesterday?"
Second Girl: "Well, it was so stormy that Charley had his hands full with the oars all the time and could do nothing but hug the shore."

While Ivan Cowart was walking across a vacant lot on the corner of Second and C, he chanced to spy something that attracted his attention. He dug it out, and lo! it was a baseball team. He let Harry Marshall have a small share in his find, and together they are putting the team in good shape. They will probably play the champion teams of the world this season. For further information see Mr. Cowart.
