UNWISE FARM PRACTICES CAUSE CLOVER FAILURES

A good stand of red clover has been increasingly difficult to secure and maintain in many sections and for quite a number of years. There are a number of causes for this partial or entire failure with red clover which may work together or separately. The most important of these, in that they are the most common and widespread, are due in a large measure, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, to continued unwise farm practices and can be remedied only by changing those practices. A run-down soil is an abated soil. In most cases such a soil can be restored to a reasonable fertility by reversing the process to which its conditions are due. Instead of the organic matter being exhausted by constant cropping, it must be restored either by farm manure or by green manure instead of the natural supplies of lime, phosphate, and potash, which may have been scanty in the first place, being further drawn on, these elements must be added to the soil.

Where clover failure is experienced or crops are unsatisfactory, the first step, say department clover specialists, should be to look after the drainage. If the land is not well drained and as a consequence the clover heaves badly in the spring, the drainage must be improved or all other efforts will be wasted. If conditions are such that the drainage cannot be improved, alsike clover should be substituted for red clover. There is no use trying red clover on badly drained land.

Where a crop failure happens on land that is well drained it is advisable to consult with the county agricultural agent or with the State extension service. In many cases the agent will know whether the soils in that section need lime or some fertilizer, and the remedy can be applied at once. Where no certain information is available a simple trial will soon tell the story of what clover needs to thrive on that particular farm.

If it is organic matter that the soil needs, sweet clover may often be substituted to advantage providing the soil is well supplied with lime, and the soil will be restored to a condition where red clover will grow. Unfortunately, most of the clover failures occur on soils deficient in lime, and on these the results with sweet clover will be equally unsatisfactory. Soy beans or cowpeas may be grown for hay or soil improvement, but it must be noted that if these crops are removed as hay there is no benefit to the soil.

States Department of Agriculture, which has been devoting much attention to cheese making in recent years. Cooperative work with several factories in Ohio have shown that the trouble known among makers as "glass cheese" can be prevented by maintaining in the milk used a proper ratio between the fat and the casein. All factories which followed the department's recommendations had no trouble of this kind, while four factories which did not comply with the conditions had trouble as before. Tests were made with the centrifuge to improve the "eyes" formation in Swiss cheese, and in nearly every case the centrifuging resulted in cheeses with fewer but larger "eyes." Of 241 cheeses made at the Grove City, Pa., creamery from separated milk 77.6 per cent were fancy, 7.1 per cent were No. 1, and 15.3 per cent No. 2. Of 109 cheeses made from unseparated milk 30.3 per cent were fancy, 52.3 per cent were No. 1, and 17.4 per cent were No. 2.
