"LONE STAR RANGER" WITH MIX COMING

Tom Mix, beloved king of the saddle, and "Tony," his wonder horse, are coming to the B-I-I Theatre Sunday in the William Fox screen version of "The Lone Star Ranger," popular narrative from the pen of Zane Grey.

It is the story of the life of the daring Texas Rangers who went out "to get their man" despite hazard and obstacle. It is such a stirring drama, that has made Tom the favorite film actor here.

Lambert Hillier, who directed the photoplay, took his company to the plains of Texas that he might instill into the picture every element of beauty and interest that has become traditional to the Lone Star State. Such a combination as Tom Mix and Zane Grey in the Fox production promises to present an excellent picture.

Why Women Use Glycerine Mixture

Women appreciate the quick action of simple glycerine, buckthorn bark, etc., as mixed in Adierika. Most medicines act only on lower bowel but Adierika acts on BOTH upper and lower bowel, and removes all gases and poisons. Excellent for obstinate constipation and to guard against appendicitis. Helps any case gas on stomach in TEN minutes. Flanery's Drug Store.

WITNESS, The Hon. C. P. Barnard, Judge of the County Court of the State of Oregon, for the County of Lane and the Seal of said Court hereto affixed, this 20th day of February, 1924. C. P. BARNARD, County Judge, ATTEST: R. S. BRYSON, County Clerk. (Seal of the County Court) F 21-25 M 6-13-20

Andrew, too, had to suffer for allowing his children to find fault with their mother, and when he complained of the same old dessert, his wife told him to sprinkle a little salt over it. Mother Harwood, coming in softly one evening after she had just been elected president of her favorite club, heard voices in the living room and listened, as she had done once before.

"I wish mother were different," said Laurette. "She isn't like mother at all. She knows so much and is so popular that—"

"We don't get a look-in," interrupted Andy. "She's a wonder, all right, but I kind of like to have some one to talk to, but she's so pop—"

"You children weren't satisfied before, and you aren't satisfied now with your mother, the most wonderful woman in the world. You let mother take care of herself and you love her just as she is, as I do." It was Andrew's voice that boomed this pronouncement.

Mother Harwood, in the hall, decided that they had had enough. And yet, she had no idea of giving up all the pleasure she had found in her new life. Rapidly she decided to substitute half her clubs for half the "little things" and half the "little things" for half her clubs. So she went into the living room and introduced her family to the new president of the "Thought and Work."

They exclaimed and congratulated, and mother patted her husband's cheek.

"Special dessert tomorrow to celebrate, and now I think I'll mend a few socks, just for fun."

Yah, Yah! Weary Wiggins—I say, Mugsy, is your leg sleepy? Mugsy—What do you mean? Weary Wiggins—Well, yer shoe's yawning.

WHAT COUNTS

By JOAN M. GRAY (© 1924, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

MOTHER HARWOOD came softly down the stairs, the light shining on her silver hair and a soft smile on her lips. She had just turned down her beds and laid out their night clothes—Andrew's, Andy's and Laurette's. Andrew was her husband, her biggest boy; Andy and Laurette were her children, just out of college and full of great ideas. Mother Harwood stood in the hall and listened, not eavesdropping, but simply loving the sound of their voices.

"But, daddy," Laurette cried, "what does she get out of life? She's only fifty, and yet she's so settled. You have your outside interests—your golf, your clubs—and mother doesn't have a thing."

Mother Harwood gasped. So she was getting it tonight, and the temptation overcame her to find out what her family thought of her. She listened. "My dear," Andrew's voice boomed, "your mother has always been a homey little person. That's why I love her."

Tears shone in Mother Harwood's eyes. "Of course she is," rumbled Andy, "but think what we'd all get out of life if mother'd join some clubs, go to lectures, argue with us over reform and new thought, instead of just smiling at us and fixing the flowers and books and desserts and turning down our beds and darning our socks. Why, those things don't count. It's the big things, the—"

Mother Harwood sat down abruptly on the lowest step. So her little love-things didn't count—the little things that made her home the cheeriest, homiest, most-sought-after home in their suburb.

Those children were so used to their comforts that they were finding fault with the giver. She'd show them, would Mother Harwood.

She went into the living room, all smiles and sat down by her sewing-table. "Well," she said to her guilty family, "are you conspirators or traitors or something. You look it."

They all talked at once and Mother Harwood, her mending untouched, sat and listened, laying her plans. "This was the last evening that there were fresh flowers all about, that the chintzes were quite so bright and the beds ready to receive their sleepy guests. It was the last night that Andrew, Andy and Laurette had an attentive listener. For Mother Harwood, next day, hired another maid, gave her a stern instruction as regards the "little things," and then became a club-woman—in every sense of the word.

She joined every club in the vicinity—it was easy because she had so many friends—and she became adept in every new movement, thought and attempt. Andrew trying to talk about his golf, and Andy and Laurette, trying to air their opinions at dinner, were completely snubbed by Mother Harwood and her own ideas.

She replied to Laurette, when daughter told her that it wasn't half so nice to go to bed when mother hadn't turned down the covers. "Darling, I don't have time. And little things like that don't count, anyway."

Andy got the same thing. He called his mother into his room one evening when he was dressing to go out. She hurried in, ready to go out herself, and he said:

"Mother, I can't find a whole pair of socks anywhere. The ones that have heels haven't any toes. What shall I do?"

"Buy some, or mend those, dear boy. I can't be bothered with little things like that. They don't count. By-by!" She hurried out, leaving Andy feeling uncomfortable.

Andrew, too, had to suffer for allowing his children to find fault with their mother, and when he complained of the same old dessert, his wife told him to sprinkle a little salt over it.

Mother Harwood, coming in softly one evening after she had just been elected president of her favorite club, heard voices in the living room and listened, as she had done once before.
