Pole Flight Hero

Lincoln T. Ellworth, the Arctic explorer who financed and went with Amundsen in the airplane for the North Pole, is in town Tuesday. He is using a pole.

Ellworth was in high spirits as he again set foot on American soil—for, as he admitted, there were many hours in those ice wastes when he knew full well the chance of saving his life was mighty slim. A bronzed tan from that glaring 24 hour a day Arctic sun was still on his cheek. He looked the picture of perfect health.

Asked his greatest thrill during the eventful three weeks while within a hundred miles of the pole—he said it was the moment when, after weeks of struggle, the great lane rose into the air—and the return to civilization was under way.

"I cannot say enough in praise of Captain Amundsen and every man-jack of the crew," said Ellworth. "We accomplished the seeming impossible—when with the most primitive of instruments—three wooden shovels and our hands, we moved tons of snow and ice and succeeded in digging the one plane free from its frozen bed."

"But on that day, following failure after failure in trying to get into the air, the plane took the air, well our feelings can never be told in words."

"Yes—we are going to try again and by the air route—but this time it will be in dirigible instead of planes I do not think the airplane is yet developed to the point of making a successful trip to the pole."

"The crew on the next trip—will be exactly the same as the last. They are wonderful men—every one of them. Facing death—there never was one word of complaint—no lack of courage—and every fellow giving every ounce of his strength to save the expedition."

"Captain Amundsen will be here in October at which time a meeting will be held to decide—how we can finance the next trip and other details." Mr. Ellworth is very modest. He would not talk about himself—nor the important role he played. For instance: How he rushed to the rescue—and single-handed saved two members of the crew who had broken through the ice and were struggling in the Arctic sea.

Miles, Baker, and Lois E. Kellogg, Eugene; Thomas Michelson, Coquille, and Lola Coulter, Eugene.

Poem By Uncle John

We love to harbor ideas if they're easy to defend—when we set to makin' figgers on the value of a friend,—but, the sum of any harvest holds the element of doubt, till you reap yer crop of theories and, later, trush 'em out.
Facts is—we find that friendship comes in several different grades, when we meet the mixed varieties that's common to the trades; If you try to curb expenses when yer love is runnin' short,—well, there's nothin' cheaper'n friendship—when you price the flimsy sort.
But, the everlastin' article that's needed in our arts, is the only kind of friendship that's a balm for human hearts,— in fact, the stuff is priceless—in results that correspond, from Devotion's faithful cellar, where we bottle it—in bond!

Has Tonsils Removed—Gladys Cooley had her tonsils and adenoids removed Tuesday.

Here from Landax—Ora E. Carter was in town from Landax Tuesday.

Your Body is a Machine Which Must Be Oiled

There is no better way to lubricate the mechanism of the human body than through the use of a good olive oil. It not only acts as a perfect lubricant but it provides fuel in the form of a perfect food.

SQUIBB'S OLIVE OIL is imported. It is a bland nutty-flavored oil which makes it valuable for either table or medicinal use.

"Printing of the better kind"

If we should say the young man above was hurrying to get a copy of the last issue of the Springfield News no one would believe us.

Well—we admit that he isn't—but we do say that it is an attractive and interesting illustration which gives life to this display.

It is picked at random from the Springfield News' big advertising service—and shows the wide selection available to advertisers—no matter what they want to sell. We furnish pictures, copy and advertising suggestions which help to get immediate results. We ask no extra charge.

For use in printing of all kinds too—in the Springfield News, on bills, letter heads, blotters, booklets, circulars, etc., etc.
