MONEY TALKS!

Listen To Its STORY

"I'm a new dollar,—crisp and spotless. The cashier lays me out—I'm ready for service.
A man just borrowed me so I'm going out to settle a debt. It's a good thing I was where he could get me so quickly. I'm ready cash.
I'm in a purse now. It is dark and cramped. Ah! Light! I'm exchanged for a Christmas gift, and a bargain too! I'm thrifty.
Well, I'm in the bank again. The merchant brought me. This is a fine bank, busy, yet so friendly and willing to serve. I feel at home here.
Wow! Some fellow cashed his salary check and is tossing us around. Let's go! So long fellows! Just me left. The poor fool, he gave me away. Serves him right, he's broke, now!
Things are happening fast. I'm gambling now! There! I got away. Oh, I'm slippery. I am. Not many can hold me!
Now I'm hiding under a pillow. Some one put me here, but I don't feel safe! Just what I thought—I'm stolen.
I'll get away from this guy quick. Ah, a hole! I'll wiggle thru and out upon the street!
Here comes a man I like—he looks like he knows how to treat us! There he spies me!
Back in the bank! I'm happy and safe now! I'll work hard and when that thrifty man comes back I'll surprise him with the interest I've earned."

The Telephone's Inheritance

In its material equipment the telephone was born poor. The art of telephony inherited little from older branches of the art of communications that could help its technical progress toward its destiny of usefulness. There was a spiritual heritage, however, for the telephone worker was heir to the tradition that had grown with the years among those who undertook to transmit or transport the words of men.
The message must go through!
Greek runner, Roman courier, King's messenger, and Pony Express rider, sped to their distant goals self-urged by a consciousness that human need was being served. At the switchboard or telegraph key, in the mail-car or airplane, the manifestation of this urge is ever present.

Telephone service by its very nature inherits this Spirit of Communication. For the men and women who comprise the organization that is today responsible for the delivery of 50,000,000 messages a day, it is the endowment with which their service began.
