Confidence By Flo

A Quiet Husband Her Problem.
Dear Miss Flo: Will you please tell me why it is that my husband, who is considered a brilliant conversationalist by others, is positively mute when he is at home, with just the family? Honestly, he is so silent that sometimes I think I'll scream if he doesn't say something. When I try to talk to him he merely grunts by way of answer, and settles down deeper in his chair. But let visitors drop in, and hubby immediately becomes the life of the party.
What can I do to make him act like a human being? Ellie.

Your complaint is the complaint of other wives, Ellie, and if I could find a way of making silent husbands talk I should indeed feel that I had contributed something to the cause of unhappy wives, and earn their eternal gratitude.
Now, far be it from me to say whose fault it is that your husband doesn't talk at home. One reason may be that he is tired—he has been talking all day, and he is talked out. He has had innumerable outlets during the day and feels no need of more. Selfishly, and perhaps not understanding you need, he makes no effort to entertain his wife, because he is concerned only with his own comfort and pleasure, and is not considering hers. He's tired of babbling voices, and doesn't want to hear his own, or any one else's. The only thing he wants is silence and plenty of it.
He is indifferent to the fact, or perhaps doesn't realize, that his wife may have spent a dull monotonous day, with no companionship, doing over and over again the dull routine tasks of housework, that while they have occupied her hands, have not occupied her head, and she needs to be brightened up and have her thoughts changed by hearing new things.

There are some women, you know, who never by an chance agree with their husband's opinion on anything. To them, any subject is as good for an argument as another. A husband cannot even discuss the dinner with out getting into a lasting argument.
There are men who would not dare tell their wives that they stayed downtown after office hours to "sit in" a game of poker for an evening, or that they had taken an old friend to lunch, or that they thought such and such a girl pretty, or that they had enjoyed the conversation of some entertaining woman at dinner, or repeat something their flapper stenographer may have said. They know by experience the squalls and storms of jealousy and torrents of tears they bring down upon themselves by the most innocent remarks.
And other men do not talk to their wives because she refuses to "listen to what he says, and doesn't hesitate to interrupt a long discourse on how the foreign debt should be handled, by saying, "you know, I think I'll get that new hat, after all."
Now, you can't really blame the husband for becoming discouraged at that, can you? And if he crawls back into his shell until guests arrive—who are courteous enough to pretend to be interested, whether they are not, wifely can blame no one but herself. Perhaps if wives were better listeners, husbands would be more fluent, you might look into your own particular case more thoroughly, Ellie, and see if you are putting a damper on your husband's conversation.
Mrs. Kessey is Director.
Mrs. Mary Kessey of Springfield was elected director for five years of the Security Savings and Loan association, at the annual meeting of that organization. W. C. Washburne, of Junction City, was reelected director for a similar period.

Your Birthday Is it this Week?

FEBRUARY 28—MARCH 6
If your birthday is this week you are persistent, self-willed, and possess remarkable confidence in your own abilities. You have a strong, clear, logical mind. You plan well, and are rather stubborn. You seldom change your plans.
You have a strict sense of honor and fidelity. You are very true and loyal to one whom you like, but you are capable of strong enmity.
You rarely ask favors or accommodations, because you do not like to feel that you are obligated to others for anything. Your greatest pride is that you are not indebted to anyone for whatever you may possess, and that you earn all that you may receive.
You are very careful, and are always very much concerned about money matters. You worry a great deal about the approach of a rainy day, wondering how you can overcome obstacles and difficulties—most of which never appear.
Men born under these dates can, if they so desire, become great leaders. They usually prefer a quiet existence, however, and devote their time and talent to farming, writing, painting, science and music. They also make fine clergymen. Women born during these dates are very competent office workers. They make fine executives, teachers, actresses, designers and decorators.
