

SPRINGFIELD YOUTH IS DROWNED IN MILLRACE

The story of the drowning of Carl Adams, 16-year-old son of Mrs. N. M. Adams of 959 Mill street, Springfield, in the waters of the mill race near Judkins point and the Pacific highway last Saturday morning, was retold yesterday by Burton, the drowned boy's brother, who was with him when the canoe in which they were riding capsized.

The boys were attempting at the time to paddle their canoe to the head of the millrace, where they had been informed, D. T. Bayly, manager of the Anchorage, and a university girl companion, had been thrown into the water when their own canoe had capsized. Caught in a swirling eddy in the millrace waters, the canoe in which the boys were paddling went over, throwing them into the water, and Carl never reached shore.

The boy's body was recovered the next morning, and funeral services were held in Eugene Tuesday.

Burton's story, as told yesterday, follows, in part:

"We were walking along the highway Saturday morning and saw a man and a woman in the bushes near the other bank of the river in a canoe. A little while later a man in a large, green automobile stopped us on the road, and told us that the man and girl were drowning and that we should get a boat and go up to help them.

"We began running toward the Anchorage. I think the man must have told the woman at the Anchorage, for the fire engine passed us just as we were going in after the boat. It was going toward Judkins point.

"We got a canoe and began paddling it upstream, thinking we would take it to the head of the millrace to be used in helping get the man and woman out. We thought somebody would be there to get it and use it.

"Just as we rounded the bend above the springboard, the current tipped our canoe over. We were hot from the run and from paddling so fast, and I suppose Carl got cramps. I caught a limb and pulled myself out, and ran to the highway for help."

In the meantime, it seems, Bayly and the girl had saved themselves, and the fire engine with pulmotor had returned to town. It was called again when it was learned the boy was drowned but the body was not recovered until Sunday.

WESTERN OREGON AND POSTAL RECEIPTS SHOW WASHINGTON PRODUCED HALF OF SOFTWOOD CUT IN U. S. DURING 1925

Portland, Ore., March 4.—Sawmills of the fir districts of western Oregon and Washington produced 10 billion 751 million feet of lumber during 1925, and in connection with logging camps in the same territory gave employment to 71,000 men and paid more than $100,000,000 in wages for the period, according to figures prepared by the 4L organization and made public here today. It is pointed out that these figures are for the logging and lumbering industries of the fir districts only, and do not take into consideration the pine operation of central and eastern Oregon and the Inland Empire of Washington.

Statisticians have estimated that 23 billion feet of softwood lumber was produced in the United States during 1925. Comparing this national total with the figures for the fir districts of Washington and Oregon, as compiled by the 4L, would indicate that close to 50 per cent of the softwood cut in this country last year was produced west of the Cascade mountains in the two states named.

Included with the fir lumber produced in the Pacific slope districts of the two states were large quantities of cedar, larch, hemlock and spruce.

"You haven't lived in the greater meaning of the word, mon enfant, nor have you perceived the husks on which most friendships are fed. Fame is the most overrated thing in the world," she continued, her eyes holding a grave and pensive light. "It is the 'open sesame' to anything that its possessor might wish to obtain. It clothes one with popularity, golden opinion, and endless praise. It even gives one the freedom of unconventionality (with no risk of being anathematized) even to the point of immorality at the same time the assurance that any aberration will be condoned on the ground of temperament—temperament," she repeated, "that clever piece of propaganda put out by artists themselves as an excuse for their non-conformity to rules to which others are inexorably bound."

"You shouldn't be cynical, Lemmyne," I remonstrated, "you're too 'evilly and young.'"

"It's not cynicism m'amie, but rebellion at the injustice of things as they are. Not for myself but for others who have not had the good-fortune to attract the attention of the float-footed nymph that the world has labelled renown. But come, I must not start your day with such analytical reflections. I'll leave you now so that you may dress. Your very nice husband is patiently waiting down stairs for you to join him on a personally conducted tour of the Louvre."
