OFFICIAL PUBLICATION LANE COUNTY UNIT NO. 14

CODLING MOTH SPRAY, FIRST, IS NOW DUE

Codling moths have been emerging scatteringly in the Willamette valley since April 15, says Don C. Mote, entomologist of the experiment station. The hot spell of last week brought them out in numbers. Fully two-thirds of the moths are now flying. Warm nights are conducive to egg laying. The eggs will hatch in 8 to 16 days depending on the temperature.

The first cover spray should be on the apples and pears before the worms hatch and enter the fruit. Growers may combine this codling moth spray with their regular 14-day lime-sulphur scab spray.

The weather at this date is unfavorable for egg deposition and may continue for several days more. Where the evening temperatures at 8:00 p. m. is 60 degrees or above, the codling moth may be expected to lay eggs. Consequently when this temperature of 60 degrees at 8:00 p. m. is registered on several consecutive nights it is proper time to apply the spray. Egg laying has not as yet been observed by station entomologists, but as soon as any eggs are found the information will be broadcast.

Lead arsenate is the standard poison material. The powdered arsenate is used at 2 pounds to 100 gallons of spray solution.

Early maturing varieties of corn for silage fields do best when planted thicker than for grain corn according to Oregon experiment station advice.

More than 1,500,000 pounds of Pyrotol will be used in blasting stumps in Oregon this year in the estimate of the extension service.

The varieties of mangels that have best yields in Oregon are the giant half sugar, the Danish sludstrup, the red eckendorf and the mammoth long red. When planted rather shallow on a fairly firm seed bed between May 1 and 20 experimental plantings have given good results. Mangels require a rich soil.

Rutabagas and turnips for the Oregon coast district when planted after the middle of June suffer much less from root maggots, experiment workers have found.

Using fairly good seed with considerably less than the normal amount of disease the Oregon experiment station found that small whole seed potatoes gave as good yields as cut pieces weighing about twice as much. The whole potatoes are all blossom end pieces and better stands are produced.

PREPARE TO COMBAT

CHERRY FRUIT FLY

A campaign to combat the cherry fruit fly will be carried on in Lane county and the remainder of the Willamette valley as soon as the insect makes its appearance. The prevalence of the maggot laying fruit fly has caused California to quarantine Willamette cherries and other states may do likewise.

Fruit growers, inspectors, cannerymen and county agents met at Salem Monday and made plans with C. L. Long, extension fruit specialist of O. A. C., for the work. Instructions on how to combat the fly has been prepared by Don C. Mote, entomologist at the college, and will be distributed by County Agent Fletcher, who was in attendance at the meeting Monday.

To combat the fly a spray is used followed by two others at 10-day intervals. Men who know the fly on sight have been posted in different parts of the valley. As soon as it appears in Lane county letters will be sent to growers telling them that it is time to spray.

M. H. Harlow, president of the Eugene Fruit Growers' association, George Dorris, Springfield grower, C. E. Stewart, county fruit inspector, Lee Turner, cannery representative, and Dr. L. Scarborough, Creswell growers, attended the meeting in Salem.
