Dr. Elliot's Message to Young People Would Amend Dry Law

Dr. Charles W. Elliot, president emeritus of Harvard university, gives what would be his final message to the young people of America in the first interview he has given for many years, which appears in the current issue of Collier's Weekly by John B. Kennedy. Dr. Elliot, in his ninety-second year, believes it may be advisable to amend the Volstead law, declares that America must become a partner, not a patron of all the world, and sees the passing of unions in labor and combinations among capital. Here are his opinions:

"If I had the opportunity to say a final word to all the young people in America, it would be this: Don't think too much about yourself. When all you can think of is yourself, you are in a bad way.

"It may be advisable to amend the Volstead law slightly to permit the manufacture and sale of light beer; but beyond that it would be dangerous to go.

"New generations will find that they can get along without liquor. When the discovery is made by young Americans that drink is neither desirable nor useful, prohibition will be truly effective because then it is an accepted and not a controversial fact.

"We have in alcoholism a major evil which must be fought. "On the surface there appears a new social hypocrisy on the part of the outwardly dry who are privately wet.

"The manners of our youth today are queer, but their morals are no worse than those of their predecessors.

"I see nothing to regret in the freer condition of women politically and in the field of livelihood-earning, unless it might be that women are getting away from motherhood.

"I believe the era of struggle between capital and labor is drawing to a close because it is so well-known that this struggle is unprofitable for both. I believe unions in labor will pass and combinations among employers will pass, for the common sense of arbitration without organized moral or physical force is becoming more apparent and convincing.

"Unwavering love is the basis of genuine, enduring marriage, and the price to be paid for unwavering love is personal sacrifice. Even in small things this self-denial for another, particularly for one's life partner, bears fruit in happiness.

"America must cling to ideals and promote them. If we remain in purse-proud isolation we may be secure, but that security will be purchased at the cost of our souls.

"The Republic is not an experiment. It is a fact; it can even withstand the outbursts of the superheated patriots who are mere jingoes masquerading as statesmen and leaders. Democracy has proved itself in America, for with
