OFFICIAL PUBLICATION LANE COUNTY UNIT NO. 14

METHODS OF IRRIGATING TO BE SHOWN AT FAIR

Several Eugene hardware companies have agreed to co-operate together at the Lane County Fair in giving a demonstration of irrigation pumps and piping. Each company will have a part in the demonstration and will show some special pump or kind of machinery dealing with irrigation. Each one has some specialty which will be shown for the benefit of Lane County farmers interested in irrigation.

The demonstration will be held at the fair grounds 100 feet inside the gate on the west side of the main driveway. A meeting was held Tuesday night at Eugene to arrange details of and pick the place for the demonstration.

Representatives of the Eugene Hardware company, J. W. Quackenbush and Son, S. O. S. Implement company, the National Machinery company, and of the Fairbanks-Morse company conferred with O. F. Fletcher, county farm agent, and with F. E. Price, extension engineer of the Oregon Agriculture College at the meeting.

FARM REMINDERS

The Willamette valley is becoming more important as a commercial honey producing district of Oregon, says the college extension service, but because of un dependable weather conditions when the better honey plants are in bloom the district has been slow to develop. Danger of European foulbreed has also slowed up development. Some of the best honey plants are found including alsike, white clover and vetch. Plants of secondary importance are maple, cascara and French pink.

Careful survey of Oregon pear orchards for finding diseased bark and wood in the fall or early winter is recommended by the experiment station. All such damaged portions are removed in both bark and wood from branches, trunk and roots. This is the best method known to eliminate hold-over portions of infection for the trees next spring.

While there is an adequate number of creameries in Oregon from a handling and manufacturing point of view, several important factors require attention, says the experiment station. Some of these things must be eliminated and some improved if the creameries are to serve their purpose as an economic and efficient agency through which the farmer can continue to market his butterfat.

The real choice between growing early and late lambs in Oregon is said by the experiment station to depend on many factors. Early production is not practical unless summer range is of such quality that the lambs get fat enough for market before leaving it. The summer range must be near enough to a railroad that ewes and lambs can be trailed to the loading point without too much loss of weight. The Blue mountain section of Oregon within fifty miles of railroad is largely but not entirely early lamb districts. The distant portions together with central and south-central Oregon grow largely late lambs.

Again, School Days Require Preparations

Summer vacation days are drawing to a close and thoughts of Young America are turning to the classrooms which were so gleefully abandoned last June.

Back to school does not give the young folks so much concern just now as it does parents who must outfit their boys and girls with suitable clothing, furnishings, shoes and supplies.

Try Your Home Printer First

Many merchants buy sales books, invoices and manifold forms from traveling salesmen chiefly because they think they are saving money. They usually buy in large quantities while if they were buying from the local printer they would buy in small lots. Quantity printing is always much cheaper than in small lots.

The truth is the buyer is fooled about the price. If he had given the same quantity order to the local printer he would have gotten just as good and perhaps a better price. And, too, his money would have stayed at home, been paid out to the local people who would in turn have spent it in his store.

There has never been a traveling printing salesman come to Springfield that offered an individual piece of printing with quality and price that could beat us. We'll bet on that.
